ANECDOTES

OF

DISTINGUISHED PERSONS,

CHIEFLY OF THE

PRESENT AND TWO PRECEDING CENTURIES.

ILLUSTRATED BY ENGRAVINGS.

INDOCTI DISCANT, ET AMENT MEMINISSE PERITI.

THE FOURTH EDITION:

CONSIDERABLY ENLARGED,

AND

NEWLY ARRANGED AND DIGESTED.

IN FOUR VOLUMES.

VOL. IV.

LONDON:

PRINTED FOR T. CADELL JUN. AND W. DAVIES,
IN THE STRAND.

1798.

ANECDOTES

OF

DISTINGUISHED PERSONS.

FOREIGN.

CHARLES THE NINTH, KING OF FRANCE.

[1560—1574.]

This Prince was only eleven years of age when he was crowned. His mother, Catherine of Medicis, expressing her apprehensions, that the fatigue of the ceremony might be too much for him; he replied, "Madam, I will very willingly undergo as much fatigue, as often as you have another Crown to bestow upon me."

When the Constable de Montmorenci died, the young Prince did not immediately name another person to that place of power and convol. IV.

B sequence:

fequence: "I will," faid he, "carry my own "fword in future."

Charles spoke very much like a person sit to govern, when he said of himself one day to his Mother, who wished to keep him under her direction, "that he would no longer be kept "in a box like the old jewels of the Crown."

In his reign the infamous maffacre of St. Bartholomew was perpetrated. The old and excellent Chancelier de l'Hôpital, who was at his country-house when it happened, exclaimed, "How execrable a measure! I do not know who advited the King to consent to it; but "I fear that he will suffer for it, as well as all his kingdom."

On the fatal day of St. Bartholomew, Charles fired with an arquebuse from the windows of the Louvre upon his Huguenot subjects, (who were crossing the Seine in hopes to avoid the general carnage and massacre) crying out at the same time to the soldiers that were near him, "Fire! fie!"

One of the great annulements of this Prince was, to cut off the heads of the different animals which he met with, after having paid the owners of them for their loss. He was one night about to exercise the same cruelty upon the mule of M. de Lansac, who stopped his Majesty in his noble amusement by exclaiming, "Quid tibi cum Mulo meo dissidum intercessit, Rex Christianssime?"

5

Charles was extremely fond of the exercises of the field, and wrote a treatise upon them, which was published by Villeroi in 1625 with this title: "Chasse Royale par Charles IX." He was indeed a Prince of great activity of body, and hated to stay in the house. Houses he used to call the tombs of the living.

Charles built a forge near his palace at Fontainbleau; "where," fays Brantôme, "I have feen him hammer out guns, horfe-shoes, and other things in iron, as well as the strongest and most expert smith."

He was fond of coining money. Having one day shewed some coin of his making to the Caidinal of Lorrain, "Sire," faid the latter, "how happy it is for you that you always carry "your own pardon about you!" In bad weather Charles used to send for the Poets that were about his Court into his closet, and amuse himself with them. He made good verses himfelf; many of them are to be found amongst the Works of Ronfard.

The following lines were addressed by him to that writer; in which, in a very elegant manner, the empire of the poet over the minds of men, is preferred to that of the monarch over their bodies:

L'art de faire des vers (dút on s'en indigner)
Doit être à plus baute prix que celui de regner.
Tous deux également nous portons des couronnes,
Mais Roy je les reçois, poete tu les donnes.
Ton esprit enstammé d'une cœleste ardeur
Eclate par soi-même, & moi par ma grandeur.
Si du côté des Dieux je cherche l'avantage,
Ronsard est leur mignon, & je suis leur image.
Ta lyre, qui ravit par de si doux accords,
T'aservit les esprits dont je n'ai que les corps.
Elle t'en rend le maître, & sçait t'introduire
Où le plus sier tyran ne peut avoir l'empire.

Charles was generous, particularly to men of letters. He pensioned and gave rich benefices to Amyot, the celebrated translator of Plutarch, who had been his tutor. One of his maxims was, that a King should be continually giving; and that as all the money in the kingdom came to Kings, in like manner as small rivers fall into the Ocean, they should again distribute it in different channels.

When Charles was at Bourdeaux, he pardoned a Nobleman whom the Parliament of that city had condemned to death for having killed a man. The King sent for the widow of the deceased person, and said to her, "Madam, I " trust that you will likewise pardon the mur-" derer of your husband, and accept of his " estate to indemnify you for his loss."—" Sire," replied the high-spirited Lady, "I cannot ac-" cept of fo mean and fo fcandalous an indem-" nification. But fince you are more powerful " than the laws and justice, I intreat you to " grant before-hand to my fon the same pardon " that you have granted to the murderer of his " father, and I shall, in consequence of that " pardon granted to him, bring him up with "the hope that he will revenge, in your place, - " the death of his father, without having any " reason to fear for his own life."

After the accursed day of St. Bartholomew, Charles became wretched and melancholy: he continually imagined that he heard groans and shrieks; he lost all relish for his usual amusements; and, after a disease of a few days, died in the most horrid manner, his blood exuding through the pores of his skin. Not long before his death, his mother (Catherine de Medicis) approached his bed, to tell him fome news which she thought would have roused him from his state of languor and despondency. "Alas! "Madam," replied he, coolly, "all sublunary things are now become quite indifferent "to me."

CATHERINE DE MEDICIS.

WHEN this execrable Princess landed at Marseilles, the galley which carried her bore the device of the Sun, with these words in Greek, "I bring light and fine weather." The events of her Government answered very ill to her device: civil wars, plots, conspiracies, rapine, massacres, and murders, filled up the period of it.

Catherine is represented as a Princess of a most majestic presence, and with great powers of pleasing in conversation, when she chose to exert them. Brantôme represents her as being sond of buffoons, and always ready to laugh at their jokes; "for," adds he, " de son name! "elle étoit jourale, et aimant à dure le mot. Her "after-

" afternoons (according to the lame Writer) were

" always paffed in embroidering and in working

" on silk, in which the greatly excelled."

Many faires were published against her: her usual method of treating their authors was to fay, "If these blockheads now did but know "half as much of me as I could tell them!" When desired to punish them, the replied, "I "hope I have a soul above revenge."

At the fiege of Havre, the mounted on horseback at the head of her army, exposed herself to the fire of the cannon like the most veteran foldier, " and shewed not the least " symptoms of fear," says Brantôme, " when " the bullets flew about her. Her maids of " honour," adds he, " were not so well pleased " with this amusement." When defired by the Duke of Guise and the Constable de Montmorenci not to expose her parion so much, " Have I not," replied Catherine, " more to " lose than you, and do you think I have not " as much courage?"

A medal was firuck of her with the fame infeription as that on some of the coins of the Roman Empresses: " Cathariae de Medicis " Mater Costronas." When one day she overheard some of the foldiers abusing her extremely, the Cardinal of Lorraine said he would order them immediately to be hung. "By no means," exclaimed the Princess: "I wish posterity to know, that a "woman, a queen, and an Italian, has once in her life got the better of her anger."

Catherine was extremely liberal, and a very generous Protectress of the Arts. How mortifying it is to human nature, that perfidy, cruelty, and impiety, should stain such a character!

The Deputies of the Reformed Religion in France treated with this Queen and her Council, foon after the horrid maffacre of the perfons of their perfuasion on the day of St. Bartholomew. The parties had agreed upon the articles of the treaty, and it only remained to give fecurity on the fide of the Court for the performance of them. Many methods were proposed, and as often rejected by the Deputies: at last the Queen angrily said, "Why sure! the "word of a King is a sufficient security, is it not?" One of the Deputies answered, "No, "by Saint Bartholomew! Madam."

A Comet appearing in France during the time of the League, seemed to affect the spirits and the chearfulness of Catharine. This occasioned the following Lines:

Spargeret horrendas cum tristis in æthere crines
Venturique daret signa Cometa mali,
Ecie suæ Regina timens malè conscia vitæ
Credidit invisum poscere sata caput.

Quid Regina times? Namque hæc mala si qua minantur, Longa timenda tua est; non tua vita brevis.

Whilft thro' the wide expanse of liquid air
Yon Comet trails its horrid fell of hair,
The impious Catherine with remorse and dread
Sees the dire Fates demand her hated head.
If to portend some ill the star appear,
Be calm, great Princess, and distain to fear;
Heaven in its utmost vengeance cannot give
A curse so baleful as to let thee live.

- "I have often," fays Dupleffis Mornay, in his Notes upon the History of Thuanus, "heard
- " Henry the Fourth fay, that at the time the
- " Cardinal of Lorraine died, he was with the
- " Queen his Mother-in-law, Catherine of Me-
- " dicis, in her Cabinet, with whom he was
- " reading the office of Vespers, verse by verse;
- s and that she, lifting up her head, suddenly
- " cried out that she saw the Cardinal of Lor-
- " raine, who made a fign with his finger to her,
- " in the gefture of a person threatening her,

" very pale and very frightful; whilft hinnels (Henry) never dared to lift up his head, in spite of all the Queen said to him. Mate dame de Sauve (afterwards Marquise de Moirmoctier) who was atting in the next apartment, came into the room on hearing the Queen cry out, and the phantom immediately disappeared. The Queen on the instant sent to enquire after the Cardinal, and was told that he died about the time that he appeared to her. M. de Foix told me, that the Cardinal of Lorraine was poisoned by the Cardinal d'Armagnae, with whom he had some quarrel; which agrees," add. Duplessis, "with what is here mentioned."

FRANCIS,

DUC DE GUISE.

Or the two Princes of this illustrious House (the Duke, and his brother the Cardinal of Lorraine), Marshal do Retz used to say, "These Princes of Lorraine are of so majestic a prefence, that all the other Princes appear like mere peasants by the side of them."

After the celebrated battle of St. Quentin, a Spanish Officer of rank wrote to the Duke of Guise,

Guise, to request him to deliver up to him one of his slaves that had sled to the French camp with one of his finest war-horses. The Duke immediately sent back the horse, after having paid the slave the value of it, and wrote word to the Spanish Officer, that he would never be the occasion of putting chains again upon a slave, that had become a free man by setting his foot into the kingdom of France. "It would indeed," added he, "be a violation of the privileges of that great kingdom, which consist in restoring freedom to any one who comes into it to seek there that precious gift."

The Baron de Lunebourg, Commander of one of the mercenary German regiments that ferved under the Duke, was much displeased at the Duke's examining into the state of his foldiers; and so far lost the respect due to his illustrious General, as to draw out one of his pistols and present it at the Duke; who immediately, with the greatest sang froid, drew his sword, and knocked the pistol out of the German's hand. Guise's aid-du-camp, M. de Montpezat, was going to kill the Officer, but was intercupted by the Duke, who said, "Stop, "Sir! Do you suppose I cannot kill a man

"as well as yourself, when I think sit?" Then turning toward the German, he said, "Sir, I forgive you the insult you have put upon me; but as for that which you have done to the service of my Sovereign, of whose person I am the representative, his Majesty will settle that as he pleases." Then turning to some of his soldiers, he said, "Here, some of you conduct this insolent sellow to prison!" The Duke proceeded with his visit to the rest of the German troops, and never afterwards suffered any molestation.

The Duke was informed, that a Protestant Gentleman had come into his camp with an intention to affassinate him. He sent for him (who immediately avowed his intention), and the Duke asked him, whether his design arose from any offence he had ever given him. "Your Excellence never gave me any, I assure you," replied the Gentleman; "my motive for defining your life is, because you are the greatest enemy our Religion ever knew."—"Well then, "my friend," said the Duke to him, "if your Religion tells me to forgive you;" and he sent him immediately out of his camp. Another other person was once brought to the Duke, who had boasted that he would kill him. The Duke, looking at him very attentively, and obterving his extremely embarrassed and sneaking countenance, said to his Officers, shrugging up his shoulders, "That blockhead will never have "the heart to kill me; let him go; it is not "worth while to arrest him."

The Duke of Guise was victorious over his rival the Prince of Condé, the head of the Protestant party, at the samous battle of Dreux in 1562. The Prince of Condé was taken prisoner, and brought to the Duke, whom (after having entertained at his table) he made take half of his bed with him at night; and (as his Biographer says) the Duke slept as perfectly sound by the side of his rival, as if he had been in bed with one of his own sons.

Puttenham fays, "that a French Captain was "fitting at the lower end of the Duke of "Guise's table, amongst many, the day after there had been a great battaile foughten. "The Duke, finding that this Captain was not seene to doe any thing that day in the field, taxed him thus in all their hearings: Where were you, Sir, the day of the battaile? for I "fawe

4 FRANCIS, DUC DE GUISE.

- " fawe ye not. The Captaine answered
- for promptly, Where ye durft not have beene.
- " And the Duke began to kindle with the
- "worde; which the Gentleman perceiving,
- " faid speedily, I was that day amongst the
- carriages, where your Excellence would not
- of for a thousand crowns have been seene."

The Duke of Guise having sold most of his estates to make himself popular, it was said that he was the greatest usurer in France, as he had nearly laid out all that he was worth upon obligations.

DUC DE GUISE,

CALLED LE BALAGRE, FROM A SCAR THAT HE HAD ON HIS CHEEK,

was the fon of the preceding Duke, and from his earliest years distinguished himself by his courage and his generosity.

- "Ambition," fays the Abbé de Choify,
- " corrupted all his virtues. Having one day
- won a confiderable fum of money of M. d'O,
- " the Superintendant of the Finances of France,
- " M. d'O fent one of his Clerks with the fum

" in two bags, one containing the gold, and 45 the other the filver. The Duke by mustake or presented the clerk with the bag in which was the gold, and on his coming the next day " to tell him what a mistake he had made, the " Duke faid to him, Well then, my friend, as " Fortune has been so very kind to you, you " must look out for some other person than the Duke of Guise to envy your good luck, so go wour way and keep the money."

The Parliament of Paris gave this diffinguished Prince the noble title of "the Preserver " of his Country;" a title which his eminent qualities of mind and of body well deferved, had they not been tarnished with insolence and ambition.

At the battle of Renti, M. de St Fal, one of his Lieutenants, advancing too hastily toward the enemy, he gave him a stroke with his sword upon his helmet, and stopped him. After the battle, the Dake being told that St. Fal was much hurt at the affront he supposed himself to have received, fent for him to the King's tent, in which were the Sovereign and the principal General Officers, and told him, "M. " de St. Fal, you are offended, I find, at the " blow

16 DUC DE GUISE, LE BALAFRE:

" blow which I gave you for advancing too
" hastily; but it is surely much better that I " should have given it to you to make you " stop, than to make you advance. The blow
" is surely more honourable than disgraceful
" to you. I ask the opinion of these Gentle" men." They one and all declaring, that a blow given to repress an excess of ardour and of courage conferred more honour than disgrace.
St. Fal was satisfied.

The Duke took Calais from the English, who had been in possession of it upwards of two hundred years, in eight days time, and in the midst of winter.

The Chancellor of France, Le Tellier, used to relate this anecdote of M. de Guise:—The Duke was married to a Princess of Cleves, a woman of great beauty; and from living in a very gallant court, that of Catherine de Medicis, she was supposed not to be insensible to the passion which a handsome young man of the name of St. Maigrin entertained for her. Catherine de Medicis having on some particular day invited the principal ladies at the court to a ball and supper, at which each of them was to be served by the young noblemen of the court, who were the Duke very anxiously intreated the Duchess not to be present, telling her that he did not in the least mistrust her virtue, but that as the Public had talked pretty freely about her and St. Maigrin, it was much better that she should not go, as it might afford fresh matter for scandal. The Duchess pleaded in excuse, that as the Queen had invited her to go, she could not possibly refuse her. The Duchess went to the entertainment, which lasted till six o'clock in the morning. At that very late hour she returned home and went to bed. She had, however, scarcely lain herself down in it, when she faw the door open very flowly, and the Duke of Guise enter the room, followed by an aged fervant, who carried a bason of broth in his hand. The Duke immediately locked the door, and coming up to the bed in a very deliberate manner, thus accosted her in a firm and determined tone of voice: "Madam, al-" though you would not do last night what I " defired you, you shall do it now. Your " dancing of last night has most probably " heated you a little; you must drink immediately this bason of broth." The Duchess, fuspecting it to be poison, burst into a flood of tears, and begged hard that the Duke would permit her to fend for her Confessor before she drank C WOL. IV.

drank it. The Duke told her again that she must drink it; and the Duchess, finding all refistance to no purpose, swallowed the broth. As foon as The had done this, he went out of the room, having locked the door after him. three or four hours afterwards the Duke again paid her a visit, and, with an affected smile upon his countenance, faid, "Madam, I am " afraid that you have spent your time very " unpleasantly since I left you; I fear too that " I have been the cause of this: judge then, " Madam, of all the time that you have made me " pass as unpleasantly as this. Take comfort, " however; you have, I affure you, nothing " to fear. I am willing to believe, in my turn, " that I have nothing to be apprehensive of. " But however, in future, if you please, we will " avoid playing these tricks with one an-" other."

The Duke was affaffinated in 1588 by Poltrôt de Maré, a Huguenot, and an enthusiast, who thought that by this horrid action he did fervice to religion, in violating one of her most facred laws.

On the day before that on which he was affaffinated by order of his Sovereign, Henry the Third, fome one put a note under his plate at dinner, dinner, to inform him of the King's intention. He read the note with great coolness; wrote under, with his pencil, "Il n'oseroit, He dare "not do it;" finished his dinner very quietly; and the next morning attended his Sovereign as usual, when he found too late the truth of the intelligence conveyed to him. The generous King of Navaire, afterwards Henry the Fourth of France, said upon the occasion, "If Guise "had fallen into my hands, I would have "treated him in another manner. Alas!" said he, "why did he not unite himself to me, and "then we would have gone together and con-"quered that fine country of Italy?"

The Duke of Guise, however, well deserved the fate he met with. He was in arms against his Sovereign; and at the detestable day of St. Bartholomew caused the brave and virtuous Coligns to be murdered, and afterwards trampled upon his dead body, when it was thrown out of the window by his savage orders. Guise was brave, magnificent, and generous; three qualities which but too often fascinate the minds of the mass of mankind so much, that they do not sufficiently consider whether they are directed by justice and discretion.

20

The last Duke of Guise gave the Abbé Arnaud the following instance of his uncle's extreme readiness in taking a resolution, and his firmness in executing it:

" The Duke of Guise was one evening at "a ball given by Catherine de Medicis at " Paris, and was dancing with a beautiful lady " of rank, with whom he was upon very good " terms, when, taking him aside, she whispered " in his ear, " Upon my word, it is a fine thing " to fee you amuse yourself here, while your " enemies are getting poffession of the town " of Meaux from you!" He got out of her " in as few words as possible the secret of the " enterprize that was carrying on against him, " and without appearing to take any notice " of what was told him, ordered one of his " gentlemen to go directly to the Hotel de "Guise, and to wait for him there with an " Arabian horse that could make great expe-" dition. The Duke staid out the ball as if " nothing had happened, returned home, un-" dreffed himself, went to bed, and dismiffed " all his attendants. Soon afterwards he got " up, dreffed himfelf, and by a back stair-case " reached the private door of his hotel, where " his groom was waiting for him with his horse,

" as he had ordered. He immediately mounted him, and without a fingle attendant " reached Meaux, thirty miles distant from " Paris, just as the gates were opening. He " pushed on directly to the guard-house, and " in a firm tone of voice asked where such and " fuch Officers were, whom he named, and " ordered them to be brought before him. A " fudden murmur immediately rifes among " the foldiers. The inhabitants hearing that " M. de Guise was arrived, follow him imme-" diately to the market-place, where he flops to " harangue them. He then makes all those " persons lay down their arms who had taken "them up against him. He delivers from the " prisons those of his own party, which the " contrary one had thrown into them. " fhort, he spoke and he menaced with so much " fierté and dignity, that he made the people " do just as he pleased; and after having put " every thing upon its antient footing in his " own favour, he returns to Paris with the " fame speed with which he left it, and appeared " the fame day at the Louvre, the Court of his "Sovereign in that city, as if he had never " quitted it."

On Princes fo powerful, and fo excelling in courage courage and in resource, Charles the IXth might well make this Quatrain:

Le Roi François ne faillit point Quand il prédit que ceux de Guise Mettroient ses enfans en pourpoint, Et tous ses sujets en chemise.

King Francis in a prophet's strain
Thus paints the race of proud Lorrain;

- "These Princes of the House of Guise Such wond'rous power exert,
  - Such wond rous power exert,
- "The doublet of my fons they'll feize,
  "My fubjects very fhirt."

The bodies of the Duke and his brother the Cardinal were refused to their mother, by the Monarch who had caused them to be murdered: they were consumed by quick-lime immediately after the affassination, and were buried in the church of the Dominican Convent at Eu in Normandy; where they are deposited under two monuments without any inscription.

The Duke of Guise's person was so majestic, that when his sovereign, Henry the Third, caused him to be massacred in his presence, he could not help exclaiming, as he saw him lying on the ground, "Mon Dieu, comme il est grand, " étant mort!"

The Duke of Guise, on setting out upon fome very dangerous expedition, was defired by his brother, the Duke of Mayenne, to deliberate maturely before he engaged in it. " Brother," replied he, " be affured, that what "I was not able to resolve on in a quarter of " an hour, I should never resolve on, if I were " to fpend my whole life in thinking upon 66 it."

ANNE, DUC DE MONTMORENCI,

GREAT CONSTABLE OF THE KINGDOM OF FRANCE,

who was Prime Minister of France in the reigns of Francis the First and Henry the Second, as well as in those of Francis the Second and Charles the Ninth, preserved that degree of confideration which must ever be paid to a man of his abilities, and the first Christian Baron * of Europe.

• The Genealogists pretend that this illustrious family is descended from Lisbius, the most noble and the most powerful of the Gauls who inhabited that part of France called L'Isle de France, and that he was converted to Christianity by St. Denis about the year 245.

Under the reign of Philippe le Bel, about the year 1268, the head of the family of Montmorenci is thus entitled, " Montmorence premier Baron Chresteen de France, premier " Seigneur de Montmorence que Ros en France." This made the CĄ

24 ANNE, DUC DE MONTMORENCI.

Europe. This great man was very unwilling to take up arms against the Prince of Condé and the Colignys, to whom he was endeared by the ties of friendship as well as those of consanguinity. He was, however, induced to give way to this measure, so inimical to his disposition, by the following animated and forcible speech of his wife (Magdaleine de Savoie), of whom he was very fond:

- "It is then in vain, Sir, that you have taken as a motto to your escutcheon, the word of command that your ancestors always gave at the onset of every battle in which they were engaged (Dieu aide au premier Chrestien),
- " if you do not fight with all your energy in
- " defence of that religion which is now at-
- " tempted to be deftroyed. Who then is to
- " give an example of respect and of venera-
- " tion for the Holy See, if not he who takes
- " his very name, his arms, his nobility, from the
- " first Baron of France who professed the holy
- " Religion of Christ?"

the celebrated Pere de la Rue say in his funeral oration upon the Marechal de Luxemburgh, in speaking of his ancestors,

- "La couronne n'est plus ancienne sur la tête des nos Rois, que la
- " Noblesse dans le sang de ces beros.—The crown is not more
- " antient on the head of our Monarchs, than the Nobility
- " in the blood of these heroes."

At the age of feventy, Montmorenci took the command of the army which Charles the Ninth fent against the Huguenots in the plain of St. Denis. In spite of the suspicions of his fidelity which Charles and Catharine de Medicis, without any reason, had entertained of him, the Huguenots were defeated. The Constable. after having performed prodigies of valour, after having received feveral wounds in his hands and his face, broke his fword in the body of one of the enemy's dragoons; and as if indignation and despair had added to his courage, he still fought with the exertions and vigour of a young man. In this fituation Robert Stuart came up to him. and putting his loaded pistol to his throat, called out to him to furrender. "What, tell me " to furrender!" replied the Constable, "furely "you do not know me."-" It is then be-" cause I know you," said Stuart, " that I "give you this." On the instant he fired his piftol, the charge of which the venerable Warrior received in his fide; then recovering himself, though mortally wounded, he gave Stuart so violent a blow with the pommel of his fword in his face, that he broke three of his teeth: each of them at the same instant fell from his horse, the Constable in a swoon, and dying. Montmorenci, foon recovering from his fainting fit, asked those who surrounded him, how the engagement was going on; and on being told that the King's army was mafter of the field, and that the engagement had been (as one might fay) fatal only to himself, he returned his thanks to the God of Battles, and begged them to quit him, and not, on his account, leave the victory imperfect. Then addreffing himself to M. de Sanzai, a relation of his, and a man of rank, he faid, "I am a dead " man; but I bless Heaven for permitting me " to die for my Religion, my King, and my " Country. Tell his Majesty how happy I am " in finding that death, which I have so often of fought in vain in the fervice of his father " and of his ancestors." By this time his children and his friends came up to him, and flattered him with the hopes of recovery, but finding himself struck with death, he intreated them to let him die on the field of battle. For a long time he refifted their intreaties to be carried to Paris; at last, not being able any longer to withstand them, he said, "I consent then to be "taken to Paris, though under no hopes of " being cured of my wounds, for I am a dead " man; but to see once more the King and the " Queen; and to carry to them in my own " person, and by means of my wounds, the " ftrongest affurances of the fidelity that I have " ever preserved in their service."

In his last moments, while he was suffering the most excruciating torture from his wounds, a Cordelier exhorted him to patience, and resignation to the will of Heaven. "Ah! my good Father," replied the venerable here, "can you suppose that a man who has been able to pass a life of near eighty years with honour, cannot tell how to terminate progerly the last quarter of an hour of it?"

MARSHAL SEPIER.

" In the time of Charles the Ninth, French "King," fays Master Puttenham, "I being " at the Spaw Waters, there lay a Marshal of " France, called Monsieur de Sepier, to use "those waters for his health; but when the " Phyfitians had all given him up, and that there was no hope of life in him, came from " the King to him a letters patents of fix thou-" fand crowns yearly penfion, with many com-" fortable wordes. The man was not fo much " past remembrance but he could say to the " meffenger, Trop tard! trop tard!—Too late! " too late! it should have come before. For " indeede it had been promised long, and came " not till now that he could not fare the better " for it."

BARON D'ADRETS

was, during the celebrated League of France, Governor for the Huguenot Party in the city of Maçon in that kingdom. By way of amufing fome French ladies that he had with him at fupper, he threw headlong from the walls of his caftle, into the river Saone, the Catholic prifoners that were brought in, tied two together.

D'Aubigné calls him, "inventeur de tous cruantez, qui bouffonnoit en les exécutant—an inventor of all kinds of cruelties, who used to play the buffoon while he was executing them."

He would fometimes make his prisoners throw themselves headlong from the battlements of a high tower upon the pikes of his soldiers. One of these unfortunate persons having approached the battlements twice, without venturing to take the dreadful leap, the Baron reproached him with his want of courage in a very insulting manner. "Why now, Sir," replied the Prisoner, "bold as you are, I would "give you three times before you took the "leap." This pleasantry saved the life of the poor fellow.

This minister of cruelty being one day asked by D'Aubigné, why he made his soldiers exercise such horrid acts of barbarity, in a manner by no means consonant to his very great courage, replied, "that when soldiers make war in a respectful manner, they carry both their heads and their hearts too low;—that it was impossible to teach them to put properly at the same time their hands to their swords and to their hats;—and that, in taking from them all hopes of mercy, they were under the necessity of looking for no asylum but under the shadow of their standards, and of not expecting to live unless they were victorious."

ADMIRAL DE COLIGNY.

THE manner of life of this illustrious perfonage is thus described by his antient Biographer:

"As foon as the Admiral had quitted his bed, which, in general, was very early in the morning, and had wrapped his night-gown round him, he knelt down, as well as his attendants, and made a prayer, after the custom of the French Huguenot churches; after which,

"which, while he was waiting for the time of the fermon (which was preached every other day, accompanied with the finging of pfalms), he gave audience to the Deputies of the Churches that were fent to him, and was employed in public affairs. Occasionally, he did business after the fermon till dinner-time.

When dinner was ready, his houshold fervants, except those who were immediately " employed in preparing the necessaries of the stable, all waited in the great hall, where, the " table being laid, the Admiral, with his wife " by the fide of him, flood at the top of it: if there had been no fermon that morning a " pfalm was fung, and then the ufual benediction; which ceremony a great number as " well of German Colonels and Captains as of " French Officers, who were asked to dine with " him, can bear testimony he observed, with-" out ever intermitting a fingle day, not only in his own house, and when he was quiet, " but even while he was with the army. The " cloth taken away, he rose, as well as his wife " and all his attendants, and either returned "thanks himself, or caused his chaplain to do " it. And observing that some of his houshold " could not regularly attend the prayers in the " evening, on account of their occupations and " amusements, he ordered that every one of " them should present themselves in the great " hall after supper, and then, after singing a " psalm, a prayer was said.

2

"The number of the nobility of France, " who in imitation of the Admiral began to " make this religious establishment in their " houshold, was wonderful. He indeed in " person very often exhorted them to be re-" ligious; not thinking it enough that a mafter " should live himself piously and holily, if by " his own example he did not take care that " his fervants did the fame. It is certain, that " the virtue and piety of the Admiral made " him fo extremely respected even by those " of the Catholic party, that without the fear " and dread of torments and of massacre, the " greatest part of France would have been con-" verted to the same religious opinion and dis-" cipline.

"When the time for the celebration of the Lord's Supper approached, he called together all his houshold, and represented to them that they must not only give an account to God of their past life, but of their passions; and he reconciled those persons who had been quar-

es relling. And if any one of his fervants did

of not appear to him to be fufficiently prepared " to understand, and to have a proper veneration for the Holy Mystery, he himself took " the pains to instruct him; and if he saw any of them who perfifted in their evil courses, " he used to declare openly and before them, "that he had rather remain alone in his house, " and wait upon himself, than keep a set of wicked fervants. The Admiral, befides, had " fo high a regard for the discipline of the Colec leges, and the instruction of children, that he colon looked upon them as particular favours from " Heaven, and used to call them seminaries of "the Church, and schools of piety. He used " to fay, that it was ignorance of letters that had thrown thick darkness not only around " the State, but around the Church (in which ee the Papal power has taken its rife and proe gress, and which has so complete an authosi rity over the minds of the blind and of the " bigoted, that it did to them, according to " the antient Poets, what the God of Wealth and of Hell, whom they called Dis, did to " night and to darkness) This induced him " to build, at a great expence, the College of " Chatillon, in a fine air and fituation, where 44 he supported many eminent Professors of the " Hebrew. " Hebrew, the Greek, and Latin languages, as " well as many young students."

The most striking proof of M. de Coligny's high integrity and disinterestedness is, that though, from the great offices and dignities which he filled, he was able to benefit himself, and to gain great wealth (as most persons in his situation would have done), he never added to his paternal estate a single acre of land; and though he was a rigid economist, yet, on account of the number of persons of all ranks who came to him upon public business, and whom he treated in the most hospitable manner, so as to expend upon them what his own frugal disposition would have laid by, he died greatly in debt, and left a considerable mortgage upon his estate.

One circumstance should not be passed over in our account of this very excellent man, namely, that incredible union of mind, of affection, and of benevolence, which was ever preserved between the Admiral and his two brothers, so that they really appeared to have but one soul amongst them.

The Admiral was murdered at the age of fifty-five years and a half. He was of a middling Vol. IV. D stature, stature, of a ruddy complexion, well proportioned in his limbs, and of a ca'm and ferene countenance. His tone of voice was mild and agreeable, but he spoke with some difficulty. whole air and his walk were extremely decorous, and exhibited a pleasing gravity. He drank very little wine, ate very little, and never flept more than feven hours; and fince the last peace, he never suffered a day to pass over without putting down in writing, in his paper journal, before he went to bed, what things worthy of remembrance had happened during the time of the last troubles. His journal being found after his death, and brought to his fovereign Charles the Ninth, his most inveterate enemies could not withhold their admiration of the moderation and of the tranquillity of his mind. After the peace, when he retired to La Rochelle, he used to read every day, morning and night, a fermon of Calvin upon the Book of Job; telling his friends, that the history of that patient fufferer was his confolation and general remedy in all his calamities.

" La Vie de Messire GASPAR DE COLIGNY, &c.
" Amsterdom, MDCXXXIII, 4to."

The Admiral, like all wife and good men, was extremely unwilling to feek that redrefs by arms.

arms, which the goodness of his cause demand-"With great difficulty," fays D'Aubigné in his History, "could he be prevailed upon to " mount his hoise, and join his brothers, who " were waiting for him. This experienced " Captain," adds D'Aubigné, " had combated " the reasons that had been given for having " recourse to the dreadful expedient of taking " arms against the Sovereign, and there remain-" ed no hopes of overcoming his fcruples, when " a circumstance happened, which I will give " to posterity, not as an episode well suited to " Poets only, but as a truth which I have learn-" ed from those who were concerned in it. In " the evening after the last conversation that " the Admiral had upon the subject, he went " as usual to bed with his wife, a Princess of "the House of Savoy, a zealous Protestant, " but was foon awakened by her fobs and la-" mentations, when she thus addressed him:

" It is, Sir, with extreme regret that I difturb " your rest by my uneafiness; but the mem-" bers of Christ being torn as we now see them, " and we belonging to that his facred body, " which of us can remain infensible to this ca-" lamity? You, Sir, do not feel them less " than I do; but you can, by your superior " ftrength of mind, conceal them better.

" you be angry with the dear and faithful " partner of your joys and of your cares? Act " with as much openness as respect. She sheds " her tears and eases her mind upon your " breast. We here are remaining at our ease, " while the bodies of our brethren, flesh of our " flesh, and hone of our bone, are some of them " detained in dungeons, many of them strewn " about the fields, at the mercy of the dogs and of the ravens. My breast has become a tomb " to me fince they have no fepulture. These " fheets reproach me, because they have no " fhroud. Can we fleep fo found then, as not " to hear the dying groans of our brethren? " Should I here bring to your remembrance "the prudential reasons with which you stopef ped the mouths of your brothers? Would " you with equal fuccess take out their hearts, " and let them remain equally without courage " as without a power of answering your ob-" jections? I am afraid that this wisdom of " yours is the middom of the children of this world, and that to be fo wife toward man is " to be foolish before God, who has given you " the science of a great warrior. Can you "then, in conscience, refuse to make use of " those great military qualities with which he " has endowed you, in favour of his own chil-"dren? You have occasionally confessed to " me, that this gift of Heaven has fometimes " aroused your mind. It is the interpreter of " the will of God. Are you afraid, then, that "God should impute a crime to you, if you " obey it? The fword of a Knight which " you wear, was it given to you to oppress still " more the oppressed, or to reduce the power " of the tyrants? You have often owned the " justice of going to war with them. Can then " your flout heart quit your defire of doing " what is right, from fear of failing in the at-" tempt? It is God himself alone that hebe-" tates and dispirits those persons who resist his " commands under pretence of sparing blood. " He knows well that foul which is willing to " destroy itself, and that which is anxious to " fave itself. I, Sir, have at my heart the great " quantity of blood that our friends have loft. "This blood, and your own, will cry out in this " very bed to Heaven toward God against you, " and you will be deemed the murderer of all " those whose murders you do not prevent.

"Coligny replied: Since I find to my for"row, my dear wife, that I have availed no"thing by all my arguments of this night
"upon the vanity of popular infurrections;
"upon the uncertain beginnings of a party not yet formed, the difficulty of an attempt not only against Monarchs, but against the posses-" fors of a kingdom whose roots he deep in the " ground of ages; so many persons interested in " its preservation; no prospect of an attack " from without; but a general peace just con-" cluded, and in its very first bloom, and, what " is worfe, made with our neighbours, who are " joined together to ruin us, add then, the de-" fection of the King of Navarre and the Con-" ftable from our party, fo much power on the " fide of our enemies, and fo much weakness on " ours; and if all these circumstances taken to-" gether will make no impression upon your " mind, put your hand upon your heart, found " the inmost recesses of your conscience, and " then tell me, if you think you can support " numberlels defeats; the calumnies of your " own party, as well as those of your enemies; " the reproaches that mankind are but too often " apt to make, who judge of every event by " the fuccess of it; the treachery of your own " friends; flight, banishment; the fury of the " English, the violence of the Germans; dis-" grace, shame, nakedness, hunger, difficult " enough to bear when happening to yourfelf, " but when happening to your children rendered " insupportable. Feel, then, within yourself, " how you can bear to die by the hands of the " executioner, after having first beheld your "husband dragged along the ftreets, and ex"posed to the insults of the multitude; and, to "close all, to see your children made the des"picable slaves of your enemies, who have "risen into consequence by your deseats and "calamities. I give you three weeks to confider all this, my dear wise, and when you have steadily made up your mind to it, I "will go and perish with you and with your friends.

"Madame de Coligny inftantly replied:
"These three weeks are already passed with me.
"Your courage will never be conquered by "that of your enemies. Exert it then, immediately, and do not oblige me to lay upon "your head the lives of all those that shall die
"in these three weeks. I summon you, then,
"in the name of the Most High, to deprive us no longer of your efforts. If you delay any "longer, I shall be a witness against you in the "dreadful day of judgment."

Coligny immediately joined his brothers; and the wars between the Catholics and the Proteftants of France commenced, which ended in the treacherous pacification of 1571. Coligny, with the rest of the heads of his party, came to Paris, where they were treated with such extreme kindness by Charles the Ninth and the Catholic party, that one of the Admiral's Officers begged leave to be permitted to retire from Paris. Coligny, whose own honesty and openness of character ever rendered him unsuspecting, asked the Officer if he had lost his wits, to defire to go away at fuch a time. "Alas, Sir," replied he, " I had rather fave my life with " fimpletons like myself, than lose it with wife " men like you! Our new friends here are of too civil by half to us. I fear some mischief, " and wish I could prevail upon you to have " the fame apprehention." Coligny, however, remained, and, a few days before the detestable maffacre of St. Eartholomew, was wounded in the hand and in the arm by a shot from a musquet, as he was on his way to visit the King at the Louvre. The wound was not dangerous, and Charles and his Mother, Catherine de Medicis, behaved on the occasion with so much appearance of kindness and affection (the King occasionally calling the Admiral by the endearing name of Father), that no suspicion continued in his mind. Early, however, in the morning of the day of St. Bartholomew, the Admiral and his attendants were awakened by a great noise at the door of the apartments in which they were lodged. He immediately, fuspecting mischief, rose out of bed, put on his nightnight-gown, and ordered his chaplain to pray, himself following the prayers with loud fighs, and recommending his life to God, which he had merely lent him for his honour. Some one who had feen Befme and his foldiers at the door, came running into the room to tell the Admiral what was the matter; adding, "It is God that " calls us to him; the house is forced, and "there is no possibility of resistance."-" I " have been expecting death a long time fince," replied the Admiral. " The rest of you will " endeavour to get away, if you can: every ef-" fort that you can make to save my life is in " vain. I commend it into the hands of Him " who gave it to me; do you make what hafte " you can, and get away." The Admiral then, with a countenance of the most placed ferenity. and in an attitude of the greatest dignity, seated himself in an arm-chair, expecting the entrance of the affaffins. Befme came in first, and not knowing the Adiniral, whom he faw feated, asked him if he was the Admiral. In a firm tone of voice Coligny answered, "I am he: " but, young man, respect my gray hairs, and " my advanced age." Befme, making no teply, struck him upon the head with his sword, and his foldiers dispatched him with many wounds in different parts of his body. They then threw the body out of the window into the courtyard. The Duke of Guise, coming soon afterwards, wiped off the blood from the face, to fee whether it was that of the Admiral, and then gave the body a violent kick with his foot. The mob of Paris next rushed in, took the body of the Admiral, tied it to the heels of an ass, and afterwards hung it up for three days on the common gallows of Paris; from whence it was taken down by fome of his friends, mangled and covered with every mark of indignity, and conveyed to his daughter the Princess of Orange, who with filial piety collected every relick of to valuable a deposit, and placed them in a small farcophagus of black marble, on which she caused to be engraven the following inscrip tion, written by the learned Joseph Scaliger:

> D. O. M. SACRVM

> > EΓ

MEMORILE GASPARIS A COLIGNIACO, COMITIS COLIGNIACI, DOMINI CASTILIONI, EQVITIS TORQUATI
REGIS, TURMÆ CENTUM EQVITUM CATAPHRACTOR, PRÆFECTI, MAGNI FRANCIÆ AMIRALI, CIVIS
MEMORIA, PER VIM OPPRESSI, IN INTEGRUM SECUNDVM AMPLISSIMI ORDINIS CONSULTUM RESTITUTA
EST, OPTIMI FORTISS. PROVIDENTISQ DUCIS, PURÆ
RELIGIONIS VINDICIS, AC PROPAGATORIS, QVI
INSTINCTU PIETATIS ATQUE ANIMI MAGNITUDINE,
ARMIS PRO ASSERENDA RELIGIONE AC LIBERTATE

PATRIÆ SYMPTIS, ADVERSVS EOS QVI REMPUB. FACTIONIBVS SVIS OPPRIMEBANT, BORBONITOR. REGII SANGVINIS PRINCIPVM CHRISTIANISS, FRAN-COR. REGIS MAIESTATEM DEFENDENTIVM AVSPI-CIIS, EXIGVA MANV, VIRTVTE INCOMPARABILI NY-MEROSOS HOSTIVM CVNEOS SÆPE FVDIT, FVGAVIT, PROFLIGAVIT. AC POST TOT FOEDERATOR. HOMI-NVM INVSITATE PERFIDIÆ EXEMPLA, TOTIESQ. BELLVM OBSTINATISS. EORVM FEROCIA REPARA-TVM, TANDEM ILLOS IN PACIS CONDITIONES DE-SCENDERE COMPVLIT, VNDE AMPLIFICATO TOTA GALLIA VERÆ RELIGIONIS CYLTV, POST RES BENE ARMIS EIVS AC CONSILIIS GESTAS, ET REPVB. PA-CATA, QVI VIM FACTIOSOR. TOTIES APERTO MARTE FREGERAT, EORVM INSIDIAS, AC CLANDESTINAS INOPINATÆ PERFIDIÆ MOLITIONES, HOMO SALV-TIS PATRIÆ QVAM SVÆ AMANTIOR DECLINARE NON POTVIT. CVIVS ANIMA APVD EVM PRO QVO CONSTANTISS. PVGNAVIT, RECEPTA EST; OSSA AV-TEM IN SPEM RESURRECTIONIS HIC SITA SUNT.

Α. Δ

LVDOVICA WILLELMI ARAVSIONENSIVM
PRINCIPIS VIDVA,
PATRIS PIENTISS. TITVLVM
MEMORIÆ

P. C.

The Duke of Alençon, brother of Charles IX. was much attached to the Admiral. After the murder of Coligny, his will was carried to the King, who, on reading it, and finding it contain an article of advice to him, in which he recommended to him not to fuffer his brother to be either too powerful or too rich, turned to the Duke of Alençon, and faid, "So this, then, is "your good friend! See how kind he is to "you,"—"I do not know, Sire," replied the Duke nobly, "how much he was my friend, "but his advice shews how much he was "yours." So observed the Ambassador of England, to whom the King said, that Coligny had advised him never to trust England. "He "might, Sire, have been a bad Englishman, "perhaps, but I am sure that he was a good "Erenchman."

In some engagement Coligny was dangerously, wounded. His friends coming about him, and lamenting the state in which they found him, he said, "Alas! my friends, should not the profession which we follow make us as care- less of death as of life?"

The Admiral advised his daughter to marry Teligny, one of the most accomplished men of the Court of France at that time, for the good and excellent qualities that he had observed in him. "I give him to you," says he, " to see " cure for you contentment and happiness in " marriage, which you will find of more im-

1

" portance

" portance in that fituation than either riches or power, I affure you."

Four days before the murder of Coligny, he thus wrote to his wife:

" My dear and beloved Wife,

"THE nuptials of the King's fifter and the " King of Navarre have been celebrated to-day, " and the three or four days afterwards will be " fpent in balls, entertainments, masquerades, " and tournaments. After this, the King has " promised to give me a day, on which he is to " hear what I have to tell him respecting the " violation of the late edict of pacification; " upon which I am now very bufy. For al-" though I have a very great defire to fee you, " yet I think we should both be extremely forry " if there was any defect of activity and dili-" gence on my part. This delay, I hope, will " not keep me here above ten days longer. " If I attended only to my own fatisfaction, it " would be much more agreeable to me to be " with you than to ftay at Court, for reasons " which I will tell you when I fee you. But it " is one's duty to pay more regard to public " confiderations than to those of pleasure or of " interest. I have many other things to tell " you, "you, as foon as I fee you; which, I affure you, I wish continually, both night and day, to be able to do. At present all that I can tell you is, that at four o'clock in the aftermoon of this day the mass for the nuptials was faid, during which time the King of Navarre, with some Gentlemen of our religion, who had followed that Prince, walked about in the court-yard near the church. There are many other circumstances, besides, which I reserve to tell you at our next meeting: in the mean time, my dear and beloved wise, I pray God to have you in his keeping."

"Paris, 18th August 1572."

"These three days past, I have been tor"mented with a flatulent and nephritic colic,
"which, God be thanked, lasted only eight or "ten hours, and from which I am at present by the same goodness delivered; and I assure "you, that in this croud of banquets and of shows I shall be troublesome to no person.
"Farewell, then, once more!

" Your affectionate husband,

" CHASTILLON."

MORVILLIERS, KEEPER OF THE SEALS.

THIS high-minded Magistrate was ordered by his Sovereign (Charles the Ninth) to put the feals to the pardon of a Nobleman who had committed a murder. He refused. The King took the seals out of his hands, and having put them himself to the instrument of remission. returned them immediately to Morvilliers, who refused to take them again; adding, " The feals have twice put me in a situation of " great honour; once, when I received them; " and again, when I refigned them."

After the execrable day of St. Bartholomew, Charles the Ninth was inclined to throw all the odium of that detestable transaction upon the House of Guise; but was prevented by the suggestions of Morvilliers, who told him, that by acting thus he would conciliate the affections of the Catholics to the Duke of Guise and the Cardinal of Lorraine, instead of preserving them entirely to himself. Charles took the advice. and immediately ordered a proces to be instituted against the dead body of the venerable Admiral de Coligny, as against that of a heretic and a rebel.

HENNUYER,

BISHOP OF LISIEUX.

THE Massacre of St. Bartholomew was not confined to the Capital of France; orders were fent to the most distant Provinces to destroy all the Protestants in them. When the Governor of the Province brought Hennuyer the order, he opposed it with all his power, and caused a formal act of his opposition to be entered on the Registers of the Province. Charles IX. when remorfe had taken place in his mind, was fo far from disapproving of what this excellent Prelate had done, that he gave him the greatest praises for his clemency; and the Protestants flocked together in numbers to abjure their religion at the feet of this good and kind Shepherd, whose gentleness affected them more than the commands of the Sovereign and the violence of the foldiers.

VICONTE D'ORTE

was Governor of Bayonne in the reign of Charles the Ninth, and received the fame infamous orders from his Sovereign respecting the Huguenots, which were fent to the Bishop of Lisieux, and behaved in the same noble and generous manner. He wrote to the King in these terms:

" Sire,

- "I HAVE communicated your Majesty's letter to the Garrison and to the Inhabitants of this
- "Town. I have been able to find among
- " them only brave Soldiers and good Citizens;
- " not a fingle Executioner."

DUC DE MONTPENSIER.

BRANTOME, who feems to have been a good-humoured fellow, like a true Frenchman, mentions en plassantant this horrid account of the barbarities of Montpensier, who was General of an army sent against the Huguenots or Protestants:

- "Whenever a male Huguenot prisoner was
- " brought to him, he faid with a finiling coun-
- " tenance, You are a Huguenot, my friend?
- "I recommend you to M. Babelot. This
- "Monfieur Babelot," adds Brantôme, "was vol. iv. E "a Cor-

" a Cordelier, a learned man, who took good " care of his mafter's conscience, and was al-" ways near him. To this personage then the " poor prisoner was brought, and after a few " questions put to him, was condemned to " death, and executed immediately. When "the prisoner chanced to be a woman, a " maiden, young and handsome, the Duke said " merely to her, I recommend you to my " ftandard-bearer; take her to him. This " ftandard-bearer was a certain M. de Mon-" toiron, of the antient house of Archbishop "Turpin, who bore the fame name; a very " fine Gentleman, fout and tall." The indecencies that the female prisoners afterwards fuffered from this M. Montoiron, were very horrible, and Brantôme discusses them with a very difgufting levity. Some shameful and difgraceful instances of the same cool and deliberate cruelty, cruelty unprovoked by any ebullition of passion or suddenness of resentment, but the effect of wanton malignity and fiend-like barbarity, are to be met with in the first book of Sully's Memoirs, still (if possible) more forcibly proving Voltaire's affertion respecting his countrymen, "Je vois des Singes qui agacent les " Tigres."

NOSTRADAMUS.

OF the great ease with which any pretended prophecy may be applied to an event, the following inflances of the applications that have been made from the prophecies of Nostradamus evince. In one of his Quatrains (for in that form his oracles are given) he says, "Les Ohwiers crostront en Angleterre." That, say his interpreters, alludes to the seizure of the supreme power in England by Oliver Cromwell.

When the French took the city of Aras* from the Spaniards, under Louis XIII. after a very long and most desperate siege, it was remembered that Nostradamus had said, Les anciens crapauds prendront Sara. The ancient toads shall Sara take.

This line was then applied to that event in this very round-about manner: Sara is Aras backward. By the ancient toads were meant the French, as that Nation formerly had for its armorial bearings three of these odicus reptiles, inflead of the three flowers de luce which it now bears.

* Arras was anciently spelt Aras.

Nostradamus was more lucky than usual in one of his Quatrains, which was applied to the death of Henry the Second of France, killed at a tournament by Montgomery; the lance piercing his eye through his golden vizor *.

Le Lion jeune le vieux surmontera En champ bellique par singulier duel, Dans cage d'or les yeux lui crevera. Deux plaies une, puis mourir : mort cruelle.

The elder hon shall the young engage,
And him in stout and single combat slay:
Shall put his eyes out in a golden cage,
One wound in two. How sad to die in such a way!

This supposed prediction gained him great credit, and many persons of consequence visited him in his retreat at Salons en Provence, to consult him respecting their fortunes: amongst other persons who were guilty of that folly and of that wickedness, were Emanuel Duke of Savoy and his Duchess, and his own Sovereign Charles the Ninth. Charles made him a very considerable present in money, settled a pension upon him, and made him his physician in ordinary, Nostradamus having been originally bred to the profession of medicine.

&quot;When I was in France," fays Lord Bacon, "I heard from one Dr. Pena, that the Queen-Mother (Ca-therine de Medicis, who was given to curious arts) caused the King her husband's nativity to be calculated under a false name, and the Astrologer gave a judgment, that he should be killed in a duel. At which the Queen laughed, thinking her husband to be above challenges and duelling; but he was slain upon a course at tilt, the splinters of the staff of Montgomery going in at his beaver." Of Prophecies, Essay 35.

The family of Nostradamus had been a Jewish family. He pretended to be of the tribe of Issachar; because it is said in the Chronicles, that there shall come learned men from the fons of Issachar, who know all times *."

Nostradamus died at Salons in 1566. Jodelle the Poet made this diftich upon the Prophet:

Nostra damus cùm falsa damus, nam fallere nostrum est; Et cùm falsa damus, nul nusi nostra damus.

" My judgment is, that they (modern prophecies)
" ought all to be despised, and ought to serve but as " winter-talk by the fire-side. Though, when I say de" spised, I mean it as for belief, for otherwise, the " spreading or publishing of them is in no fort to be despised, for they have done much mischief. And I see many severe laws made to suppress them." Bacon, Essay 35.

The following Quatrain of Nostradamus was applied to James the Second, on the arrival of the Prince of Orange at the Revolution.

Cilui qui la principaute
Tiendra par grande cruaute,
A la fin verra zi ande phalange
Porter coup de feu tres dangereux.
Par accord pourra fuir mieux
Autrement, boira fue d'Orange.
He who the British empire's reins
By force and ciuelty maintains,
Shali in his turn each horror feel,
The blasting fire, th' avenging steel.
Then let him with his foe agree,
And save the land from misery,
Or to his lips the Orange juice
Shall posson's fatal ills produce.

Nostradamus drew horoscopes and calculated nativities. Gaffendi (who had in early life believed in Astrology), when he passed through Salons in Provence, the place where Nostradamus lived, had the curiosity (as he tells us in his Letters) to examine the nativity which this pretended Prophet had calculated of the father of the principal Magistrate of the place, when he found that all the principal events of his life had taken place in the exact contrary manner to that in which they had been predicted. He was to have an increase of fortune from a stranger to his family, and he never had any fortune but that which his father had lest him; he was to be a great traveller, and he had never quitted his native province; he was to fight a duel, and he never had a serious quarrel with any person in his life.

CHANCELIER DE L'HOPITAL.

Who could have imagined that this rugged and inflexible magistrate would have amused his lessure with writing Latin verses to satirize the ladies of his time who did not suckle their own children? His poem on this singular subject is addressed to the celebrated Jean Morel. Some of the lines may be thus translated:

Can Nature, like a step-mother, deny
The lacteal balm, the tender babe's supply?
Indulgent parent! from her copious stores
The food of helpless infant life she pours;
To those vain semales niggardly alone,
Whose pride and luxury her powers disown.
Observe the savage tyrants of the field,
They to th' unnatural mother lessons yield.
Does the fierce lioness, of horrid glare,
Neglect her savage charge, her rising care;
And her young offspring, with obdurate heart,
To her fell neighbour's purchas'd care impart?

56

The poem is a long one, and contains many as fine and as ftrong fentiments as those just quoted. The late excellent Dr. Gregory of Edinburgh has, in his very ingenious and entertaining "Comparative View of the State and " Faculties of Man with those of the Animal "World," shewn it to be no less the interest than the duty of the mother (unless her state of health prevent it) to fuckle her own child. She procures greater health and spirits, as well as greater beauty, by the operation; and, adds he, " another great inconveniency attending the " neglect is, the depriving women of that inter-" val of respite and of ease which nature in-" tended for them between child-bearings. " A woman who does not nurse, has naturally " a child every year: this greatly exhausts the " constitution, and brings on the infirmities of " old age before their time. A woman who or nurses her child, has an interval of a year and " a half or two years betwixt her children, in " which the constitution has time to recover " its vigour."

The Chancellor de l'Hôpital's Latin Poems are in one vol. folio, 1585, and in one vol. octavo, 1732. Of this great magistrate's simple manner of living Brantôme gives this account:

"Il me depêcha bientôt & nous fit dîner tres bien du bouilli seulement (car c'étoit son usage). Devant le diner ce n'étoit que beaux discours & belles sentences & quelquesois aussi de gentils mots pour rire."

L'Hôpital used to say of those persons who piqued themselves upon never resusing any thing, "that they had one quality at least in common with a young produgal, and with a woman of loose conduct."

LE PRESIDENT DE THOU.

THE illustrious Thuanus said, that on his mentioning one day to his Father, Christopher de Thou, First President of the Parliament of Paris, something relating to the infamous and cruel massacre of St. Bartholomew, he stopped him shortly, exclaiming from Statius,

- Excidat illa dies ævo, nec postera credant
- " Sæcula; nos certè taceamus, et obruta multâ
- " Nocte tegi propriæ patiamur crimina gentes."
- " O may that day, the scandal of the age,
- " Be ever blotted from the historic page!
- " May the kind Fates in Night's obscurest veil
- " Cover each record of the horrid tale;
- " And hide, in mercy, from all future times
- " Our nation's cruelty, our nation's crimes!"

MONTAGNE.

WHEN Montagne's Travels were found in MS. a few years ago, in a cheft at his chateau in the province of Perigord, much was expected from them. They have been lately published, and contain nothing but the history of his disorders, and of the effects of the feveral mineral waters he tried upon them. One passage in them however, when he comes to speak of Rome, is very fublime. His observations, in general, he dictated to his Secretary, who makes his mafter speak in the third person. They were together at Rome in the year 1580: "On " ne voit rien de Rome que le Ciel, sans le-" quel elle avoit été affise, & la plant de son " gîte; que cette icience qu'on en avoit étoit " une science abstraite & de contemplation, " de laquelle il n'avoit rien qui tombât sous les " fens. Ceux qui disoient qu'on y voyoit les " ruines de Rome en disoient trop, car les " ruines d'une si epouvantable machine rappor-" teroient plus d'honneur & de reverence à sa " memoire; ce n'étoit rien que son sepulture. " Le monde ennemi de sa longue domination " avoit premierement brisé & fracassé toutes " les pieces de ce corps admirable; & parce-" qu'encore tout mort, renversé & defiguré, il « lui " lui faisoit horreur, il en avoit enseveli la ruine même."

Montagne has been falsely accused of want of religion. On finding himself in the agonies of death, he sent to some of his neighbours to pray with him, and to attend the ceremony of mass in his chamber. At the instant of the elevation of the host, he with a transport of devotion raised himself out of his bed upon his knees, and died in the act of adoring that sacred mystery of the Catholic church.

Montagne appears to have possessed a mind highly susceptible of the power of friendship. His letter giving an account of the death of his learned friend Etienne de la Boetie, is a very pathetic narrative. Montagne, at the desire of his father, translated from the Latin Sebonde's Natural Theology. He dedicates his translation to his father, and, with a filial respect not very common, calls him every where in the dedication Monseigneur.

Cardinal de Perron used to call Montagne's Essays "Le Breviaire des Honnêtes Gens." The severer Huet entitles them "Le Breviaire "des Paresseux." The peevish Scaliger cries out, "What is it to the world in general, "whether

"whether Montagne loves red or white wine best?" Yet in spite of this sarcasm of that great scholar, whatever Montagne relates about himself comes home to the business and bosom of every lover of nature and observer of the human character. To his Essays may be applied from Horace,

- " Ille velut fidis arcana sodalibus olim
- " Credebat libris: neque, si malè cesserat usquam
- · Decurrens aliò, neque si benè, quo fit ut omnis
- " Votivâ pateat veluti descripta tabellâ
- « Vita senis-

Montagne, whom no one can suspect of prejudice or bigotry, or of attachment to any thing merely because it is established, speaking of Kings, says, with his usual good humour and good sense, "We owe duty and obedience to "Kings; for that regards their office. Esteem and affection we owe to them when they are persons of virtue. Let us make the facristice for the sake of political order, to bear with them with patience, even when they are unworthy of their high office. For the same reason let us conceal their failings, and make the most we can even of their indifferent actions, as long as we shall have occasion for their support."

Though always talking and thinking about his health, Montagne affected univerfally to ridicule the professors of medicine. He used to say of them, "that they know more of "Galen than of their patients. Yet," added he, "let them live by our follies; they are not "the only persons who do so." To some hypochondriacal friend of his he said, "Get your "physician to order you a medicine for your head; it will do you more service there than "when applied to the stomach."

"Cowardice," fays Montague very well, in one of his Effays, " is the mother of cruelty. "Courage," adds he, "that I mean which "opposes itself only to resistance,

nec nisi bellantis gaudet cervice juvenci,

"ftops when it fees the enemy at its mercy. But cowardice," continues the acute Gascon,

" to shew that it can also do its part, not hav" ing been able to figure in the first rank,

" takes its part in the fecond, which is blood

" and flaughter. The murders attendant upon

"victories are generally committed by the " lowest class of the army, and by those that " have the care of the baggage. And what " causes such unheard-of cruelties in all civil " wars is, that the populace, to shew its bravery

" and

" and its military skill, steeps itself in blood up to the elbows, and tears to pieces even the body that lies prostrate at its feet."

" I, in conjunction with the Baron of Cau-" pene," fays this entertaining Writer, " had " the patronage of a benefice at the foot of " one of our Gascon mountains, in a country " of confiderable extent. The inhabitants of " this fpot, like those of the Valley Angrougne, " lived after a manner of their own, and were " governed by certain laws and regulations " which had been received from father to fon, " and to which they confented to pay obe-" dience, from the reverence they had to " eftablished custom. This little district was, " from time immemorial, in fo happy a " fituation, that none of the neighbouring " Judges had ever taken the trouble to decide " any of their causes. No lawyer had ever " been employed to confult with them; no " flranger had ever been called in to fettle " their disputes; nor was any inhabitant ever "known to be reduced to ask alms. They " avoided very fcrupuloufly all connections " with the other parts of France, to keep their " minds in the utmost state of purity; until " fome time fince, in the memory of the fa-" thers of the prefent generation, it unluckily " happened

" happened that one of the natives took it into " his head to breed up his fon as a lawyer, " having had him taught to write in a neigh-" bouring village. This youth being now be-" come a person of consequence in his own " eves, began to disdain the old customs of " the diffrict, and to put into the heads of its " inhabitants high notions of the magnificence ' "that took place around them. One of the " inhabitants having had a goat purloined from " him, he advised him to apply for justice to " the royal Judges that were nearest to him; " and thus he went on till he had destroyed all "the antient fimplicity of his countrymen. "At the tail of this innovation, the inhabi-" tants fay, there happened one of much more " fatal consequence, by means of a physician, " who unluckily for them took it into his " head to marry a young woman of their vil-" lage, and live amongst them. He began " with teaching them that there were fuch "things as fevers, rheums, and imposthumes, " and in what part of the human body the "heart, the liver, and the intestines were " placed, of which till then they had remained " in perfect ignorance; and instead of garlick, " with which they had been accustomed to " cure all their diseases, however violent and 46 dangerous, he ordered them for a cough or

" an indigestion some strange foreign mixtures, ss and began to make a trade not only of " their healths but of their lives. They fwear, " that until his time they never observed that " being out at night in the dew gave them " head-achs, that it was unwholesome to drink " any thing warm, or that the winds of au-" tumn were more unwholesome than those of " the fpring; that fince their making use of " the medicines introduced by him, they have " been befet with a whole legion of diseases, " to which they had never been accustomed; " and that they perceive a general falling-off " of their antient vigour of constitution, as well " as that their lives are shortened by one half " at leaft."

"There is no nation," adds Montagne, which has not existed for several ages without the knowledge of the art of medicine.

"Physicians were not known in the first ages, that is to say, in the best, the most happy times, and even the tenth part of the world does not make use of them. The Romans were six hundred years without them; and, after having tried them for some time, dismissed them from their city at the instigation of Cato the Censor, who shewed at least how well he could do without them, having

" lived himself eighty-five years, and having canabled his wife to attain to an extreme old age without a physician, tho' not indeed without physic, for I give that name to every thing which can contribute to the falubrity of our lives."

The lively old Gascon mentions in his Essays, that he saw three American savages at Rouen in France, who visited that country from curiofity; that they were presented to Charles the Ninth, who happened to be at Rouen at the time, and were shewn every thing curious that the capital of Normandy possessed, as the Cathedral, the Bridge of Boats, &c. The King fpoke to them for lone time by his interpreter; and after they had observed the splendor of the Court, its manner of living, and the new fight to them of a fine city, they were asked what had most struck them. "They mentioned " three things," fays Montagne, "I have for-"gotten one of them. They faid, they were much aftonished that so many men of large " ftature (meaning the King's Swifs Guards), with large beards, ftrong, and bearing arms, st should submit to obey a child *, and that " they

* A cotemporary Writer observes, that another of the things which struck them was the market-place of Rouen,

"they did not rather chuse one from them." selves to command them. They were next astonished (as they have a term in their language for men, which is, counterparts one of conther) that they had observed amongst us men sull and gorged (gorgez) with all kinds of conveniencies, and that their counterparts were begging at their doors, dying of hunger and poverty; and thought it strange that these counterparts to each other could suffer such an injustice, and that they did not either take them by the throat, or burn their houses."

"I asked one of them," adds Montagne (who appeared to be the chief, and whom the failers who brought them over called a King) what advantage he received from his fuperiority of rank to the rest of his brethren. He replied, that he marched at their head when they went to war. I asked him how many men followed him on that occasion.

where provisions and all kinds of conveniencies were immediately to be had on a man's taking a piece of metal out of a bag. Here they stopped, and failed to observe this as the effect of a regular established government, whilst they, living free and independent, are reduced to all the milenes of extemporaneous life, and often die of hunger. "He replied, pointing to a certain inclosure, that there might be as many persons as that could contain (about four or five thousand perhaps). I then asked him if his authority ceased after the war. He replied, that this mark of it only remained, that when he visited the villages dependent upon his government, they made a road through the hedges of their inclosures, that he might pass at his ease."

Montagne, in one of his Essays, with great truth calls the imagination " la Folle du Logis," that power of the mind which without proper direction serves merely to embarrass and distract the understanding.

" Plutarch," fays this excellent Writer, fays formewhere in his Chapter upon Inequality, there is not fo great a difference between one beaft and another, as between one man and another. He is speaking of the powers of the mind and the internal qualities of man. In truth, I find such a distance in point of intellect, as I think, between Epaminondas and a person who shall be nameless, that I would readily go beyond Plutarch, and say that there is more difference between those "two persons than there is between a parti-"cular man and a particular beast.

" H.m, Vir Viro quid præstat!

"And there are as many different degrees of understanding in men as there are feet from earth to Heaven: nearly without number.

* * * *

" In truth, except the mere name of King, our Kings in France put us very little out of our way.

* * * *

"Indeed, our laws are free enough," adds the honest old Gascon; "and the weight of sovereignty scarcely affects a French Gentle- man twice in the whole course of his life. "The effential and effectual subjection governs those only who wish to have it affect them, and who like to do themselves honour and to enrich themselves by such subjection. For the man who likes to keep snug by his own fire-side, and to conduct his affairs without quarrelling and without law-suits, is as independent a being as the Doge of Venice. "Paucos servitus, plures servitutem tenent:— Slavery comes but to few persons, but many persons come to slavery."

[ 69 ]

PIERRE CHARRON.

CHARRON'S celebrated Treatife on Wisdom is a kind of Commentary on the Essays of Montagne. The old Gascon was so pleased with his book and his conversation, that he permitted him to take his name and to bear his arms. The times in which he wrote could foull bear the truths advanced in the "Treatife upon "Wifdom," that he was denounced by the University of Paris as a man of irreligious principles. His friend the President Jeannin, fo well known by his negotiations * in Holland, faved his book from being condemned, by permitting the fale of it as a book of politics. The frontispiece to the Elzevir edition of Charron's Treatife represents the Goddess of Folly leading mankind by their passions.

Charron wrote another Treatife, not so much read as his Treatise upon Wisdom. It is on the Three Great Truths. In the first part he attacks the Atheists; in the second he attacks the Pagan and the Mahometan religion; and in the third he defends the doctrines of the Romish Church.

* Cardinal Richelieu used to call Jeannin's Memoirs of the Negotiations in Holland, the Breviary of Statesmen.

Charron

idea was thus dilated by the learned Sculter, and inscribed over the door of his study:

Amice quisquis luc venis, Aut agita paucis, aut abi, Aut me laborantem adjuva:

One of three things I here request Of those my studies who molest: Or to be brief in what they say, Or strait to take themselves away; Or in my toil a part to bear, And aid me with their friendly care.

HENRY THE THIRD,

[1574—1589.]

exhibited great courage at the attack made by the Duke de Mayenne upon the City of Tours. Henry the Fourth, then King of Navarre, who flood near him, faid, "Sire, I am not aftonish-" ed now, that our people lost the battles of "Jarnac and Moncontour, so fatal to the Hu-" guenot party."—" My brother," replied the King of France, "we ought all to do our duty. Kings are not more exposed to danger than other persons: balls do not look out for them more readily than for a common foldier,; and I have never heard yet

"that a King of France has been killed by a musquet ball: it will most probably not begin with me."

On his quitting the Kingdom of Poland to take possession of that of France, a Polish Nobleman faid to him, "Sire, if to have in " possession the affections of a whole Nation be " really to reign, where can you reign more ab-" folutely than in Poland? You cannot exa " pect to find in France, in the prefent fitua-" tion of that kingdom, that which you leave " behind you with us." This speech was but too prophetic of what afterwards happened: he had not long been King of France, before he was affaffinated by a Dominican Friar. The wound was not at first thought fatal; and on the day on which he died, during the celebration of Mass in his chamber, the Prince exclaimed, with great devotion, "My Lord and " my God, if my life will be useful to my se people, preserve it! if not, take my soul and " body, and place them in thy Paradise! Thy " will be done!"

"Henry's character of understanding," says Thuanus, "appears incomprehensible, in some respects above his dignity, in others below childishness." The Order of the Holy Ghost was instituted by Henry; that of St. Michael having been so disgraced by the unworthy persons who had been decorated with it, that this Eovereign called it, "Le Collier à toutes Bétes."

DUC D'ALENÇON,

WHEN this Prince, brother to Henry the Third of France, was Lieutenant-General of the Low Countries for a small part of the years 1582 and 1583, the army of his countrymen, as if they intended to finish the Feast of the Huguenots, as they favagely called it, began in the year 1572 by the celebrated Maffacre of Paris, attacked the town of Antwerp, on the 17th of January 1583, by furprize and against the faith of agreement, which they pillaged, and put to the fword many of the Protestants of that city. One French Nobleman however, the Duc de Montpensier, brother-in-law to William Prince of Orange, who was present at it, told the Duc d'Alençon, that he ought to tear out the hearts of all those persons who had advised him to be guilty of so perfidious an action, which, added he, will fo completely decry you and your army, that it will render the French nation in general detefted and execrated by all the other nations of Europe.

The French, indeed, so late as that inhuman tyrant Louis the Fourteenth's unprovoked artack upon Holland, perpetrated fuch horrid cruelties in that country, that in the year 1672 a quarto volume was published with this title: "Avis fidele aux veritables Hollandors touchant " ce qui c'est possé dans les Villages de Bodegrave " & Swammerdam, & les Cruautes enormés que " les François y on ewe cées *."-" Good Advice " to all true Dutchmen respecting what took " place in the Villages of Bodegrave and Swam-" merdam, and the unheard-of Cruelties that "the French exercised upon them; with an " Account of the last March of the Army " of the King of France through Brabant and " Flanders." The book begins thus:

"What the French have done in this country in one year, exceeds in cruelty and in horror what any Historian has faid of any Nation whatsoever, and whatever the tragic Poets have represented in any of their Tragedies. There are no pen or pencil to be found that can describe it; and this (fays the Author) was not perpetrated in towns that were conquered, but merely in those that were occupied by the troops of France."

* This curious Book is in the Butufn Mufeum.

The book is elegantly printed, and enriched with feveral very beautiful etchings by the celebrated Roman de Hoogue. It would furely be well worth while to reprint this work for the fake of those who can read French, or to translate it into the different languages of Europe for those who do not understand that language, that they may be taught what they are to expect if they should admit amongst them a people *, who, under every form of Government, as well that of a Monarchy as that of a Republic, have shewn themselves false, serocious, and sanguinary, the Blasphemers of their God, and the Enemies of the Human Race.

LOUISA DE LORRAINE, QUEEN OF HENRY THE THIRD.

When her niece, Madame Chiiftina, was fetting out for Florence, to be married to Ferdinand de Medicis, she told her, "Bear in "mind, my dear girl, that you will always be looked upon as a stranger in the country where you are going, till you have borne a child; this will ingraft you to it."

* This Article was first printed in the Autumn of 1794

ACHILLES HARLAY,

FIRST PRESIDENT OF THE PARLIAMENT OF FARIS,

remained ever faithful to his Sovereign. At the celebrated day of the Barricades in 1588, the Duke of Guise wished to attach him to his party. Harlay replied, "that the rule of "his conduct should be, the service of the "King and the good of the State; and that he "would sooner die than depart from it."

The party of the Lazgue had Lim arrested and put into the Bastule. On entering that horrid fortress, he uttered these remarkable words: "It is a great pity, when the servant is able to dismiss the master, My soul is God's, my heart is my Sovereign's, and my body is in the hands of violence, to do with it what it pleases."

MAGDALENE DE SAINT NECTAIRE,

Widow of Gui de Saint Exuperi, was a Protestant, and distinguished herself very much in the Civil Wars of France. After her husband's death she retired to her Chateau at Miremont, in the Limousin; where, with fixty young Gentlemen well armed, she used to make excursions upon the Catholic armies in her neighbourhood. In the year 1575, M. Montal. Governor of the Province, having had his detachments often defeated by this extraordinary lady, took the resolution to besiege her in her Chateau with fifteen hundred foot and fifty horse. She sallied out upon him, and defeated his troops. On returning, however, to her Chateau, and finding it in the possession of the enemy, she galloped away to a neighbouring town, Turenne, to procure a reinforcement for her little army. Montal watched for her in a defile, but was defeated, and himfelf mortally wounded.

This is all that is known of this heroine, whose courage and conduct we have seen replaced in our times by the celebrated and unfortunate Chevaliere D'Eon.

MURETUS.

This celebrated scholar was taken ill upon the road as he was travelling from Paris to Lyons; and, as his appearance was not much in his favour, he was carried to an hospital. Two physicians This great scholar wrote Latin with such elegance, that he imposed upon Joseph Scaliger some Latin lines written by himself as a fragment of Terence. Scaliger was enraged on finding out the trick that had been put upon him, and as Muretus had very narrowly escaped being burnt at Thoulouse by the sentence of the Pailiament of that city, he made this distich upon him:

Qui rigidæ flammas evaferat antè Tolofæ, Muretus, fi.mos vendidit ille mihi.

PASSERAT.

This elegant Writer, at the defire of Henry the Third of France, composed a Latin Poem on the subject of Hounds, of their varieties, of their education, and of their diseases. The celebrated Epitaph on Henry the Third, killed by a Monk, was written by him. In that which he composed for himself, he merely desires his scholars to throw garlands of flowers upon his grave:

Mea molliter offa questient,
Sint modò carnumbus non oncrata malis.
Light o'er my bones the flowery herbage rest,
And no officious lines their peace molest.

He adds,

Veni, abiz, sie vos venistis, abibitis omnes. I lived, I died; the common lot of all.

CHARLES EMANUEL THE FIRST,

DUKE OF SAVOY.

[1580-1630.]

This appears to have been one of the most enterprising Princes that ever this enterprising House has produced. His life may be faid to have been one perpetual effort. Germany, Spain, Spain, France, Geneva, seem to have been by turns the objects of his ambition and of his alliances. He died at last of a broken heart in 1630, at being deseated in most of his projects of aggrandizement. When he was pressed by Henry the Fourth of France to restore the Marquisate of Saluces, according to treaty, he remarked, "that restitution was not a proper word in the mouth of a Sovereign."

This Prince was of so close and reserved a disposition, that they used to say of him, "that "his heart was as inaccessible as his country." His historian tells us very significantly, that "He was always building palaces and churches; "he loved and encouraged learning, but was not sufficiently desirous to make his subjects "and himself happy."

Charles Emanuel was an excellent General. He used to say, that two things were requisite to make war with advantage, money and authority; and that the latter was a more sure means of keeping soldiers to their duty than the sormer. He also said, that the quality of Sovereignty, which was of itself powerful and troublesome, appeared to him agreeable in two respects; first, because it gave a Prince a power to be more generous than any other person; secondly, because it gave him the power of saving the life of a criminal.

In the opinion of the late Dr. Johnson, a history of the Princes of the House of Savoy would make a very curious and very entertaining compilation. Indeed, from their fituation, as keeping the entrance into Italy on one fide, they have been ever much confidered and courted by the other Princes of Europe; and they appear, differently from most of their Brother-Sovereigns who go to war, to have always acquired something by that horrid expedient, either an increase of territory, or some valuable indemnification in money.

HENRY THE FOURTH,

CALLED THE GREAT.

[1589—1610.]

This celebrated Prince was accused by Scaliger of not being learned himself, and of not encouraging men of learning. He indeed suffered Scaliger to go to be pensioned in Holland; but the Monarch was perhaps displeased with the haughtiness and violence of this great scholar. Henry sounded a College in Paris, and took you. IV.

particular care that the Professors should be paid their falaries regularly. In his early youth he had translated into French part of Cæsar's Commentanes; and in the latter part of his life was preparing to put together a history of his own military exploits. It is said, that he engaged the President Jeannin to write the history of his reign; telling him that he left him at perfect liberty to tell the truth, without artisce and without disguise.

Henry used to say of his sovereign power,

"I most incontestibly hold my kingdom from "God. It belongs to him immediately. He "has only entrusted me with it. I ought

"therefore to make every effort that he may

"reign in it, that my orders may be subordi
"nate to his, and that my laws may make his

"laws observed and respected."

"A King," faid he, "fhould bear the heart of a child toward God, and the heart of a father toward his fubjects."

He lamented very often the heavy taxes he was obliged to impose upon his subjects. "They have," says he, "a double land tax, "one of which is collected for the support of "my expences, the other for the wages of my officers;

"officers; the second added to the first makes the charge very heavy indeed. They press harder perhaps upon me than upon those who pay them. There is nothing that I desire so much as to ease my subjects of them. My predecessor," added he, "thought that their subjects existed only for them, and that every thing belonged to them. With respect to myself, I always think that I reign over my fellow-citizens; there is not one of them to whom I am not indebted. They are mine, and I am theirs."

He used to say, that the greatest men were always the last to advise war, though they were fure to carry it on well. He observed once to Sully, who requested him not to expose his person so much in an engagement, "My friend, " since it is for my honour and for my crown " that I sight, I ought to look upon my life " and every thing else as mere trisses."

Firmly perfuaded that bravery should be one of the principal qualities of a King, he used to say, that he should despise a Sovereign, who in time of action did not expose himself like a common soldier.

M. de Noailles was in love with the aunt of this Monarch, and wrote one day, with a diamond, upon the window of her chamber,

Nul bonheur me contente, Absent de ma Divinité.

When my Divinity I quit, All other pleasures fail.

Henry, coming into the room foon afterwards, wrote in the same manner under them,

N' appellez paz ainsi ma Tante, Elle aime trop l'humanité.

No fuch great name my Aunt can fit, She 's as a mortal frail.

There were feveral very devout Ladies at the Court of Henry. To a Courtier who was one day praising their conduct extremely, he replied,

- "The Ladies, whether they are virtuous, or
- " wish to become virtuous, have always oc-
- " casion for advice and for prudence; of them-
- 66 felves, they always go to extremes *."

On the birth of the Dauphin (afterwards Louis XIII.) he let every person into the room

- * The learned and acute Bishop Warbuiton used to say, that the two most disticult things to meet with in the
- " world, were a difiniterested man, and a woman who had
- " common fense; that fense, without which wit is folly,
- " learning pedantry, and virtue itself weakness of mind."

to fee him. The midwife intimated her apprehenfions that the great crowd would make the child ill. " Hold your tongue, hold your " tongue, Mother Midwife," replied Henry; " do not diffurb yourfelf. As this child is for every one, it is proper that every one should " have the fatisfaction to fee him."

Some one told Henry, that a particular perion of consequence of the League party, to whom he had been very kind, by no means bore him any good-will. "Well then," replied Henry, " I will be still kinder to him, " which will oblige him to love me." The Duke de Mayne, more generous, when Henry, after having taken him prisoner, gave him very liberal terms of pacification, faid, "Now, Sire, " I am really overcome."

Henry once lost at play a very large sum of money; a fum fo confiderable, that it was faid to have been fufficient to have retaken Amiens from the Spaniards. M. de Sully fuffered Henry to fend to him three or four times for it. At last he brought it to the King when he was at the Arfenal near Paris, and laid it all out upon the table before him, in the principal apartment of that fortress. Henry fixed his eyes upon it for some time with G 3 with great attention, and turning to Sully, faid, "I am corrected; I shall never lose any sum of money again as long as I live."

Of superstition he said, that it was merely the rust of religion, the moss which grows on the stock of piety. "Water," added he, "has its "froth, the earth its dust, and gold itself comes not out of the bowels of the ground without "its impurities."

Humanity appears to have been a natural virtue in Henry. When he made excursions into the distant provinces, he used to stop all the persons he met, and ask them questions, where they were going? whence they came? what they were car.ying? what goods they fold? and what was the price? One of his attendants appearing furprised one day at his familiarity, and at his entering into fuch details with his fubjects, he faid to him, "The Kings of " France, my predecuffors, thought themselves " dishonoured in knowing the value of a teston. " With respect to myself, I am anxious to " know what is the value of half a denier, and " what difficulty the poor people have to get " it, fo that they may not be taxed above " their means."

When some of his Courtiers were one day expressing their sears that his great familiality would destroy that respect for his person which subjects should seel for their King; he said, "Pomp, parade, and a severe gravity, belong only to those who seel that without such mposing externals they should have nothing that would impress respect. With regard to myself, by the grace of God I have in myself what makes me think that I am worthy of being a King. Be that however as it may, it is more honourable for a "Prince to be beloved than seared by his subjects."

On declaring war against Spain, he had thoughts of abolishing the land-tax. Sully asked him where he should then be able to find the money he wanted for carrying on the war. "In the hearts of my people," replied Henry; "that is a treasure which can never fail "mc."

He told the Prince of Rohan, that he made it his conftant prayer to God that he would inspire him with grace to forgive his enemies, to gain the victory over his passions, and particularly over his weaknesses, and to make use of the power he had granted him with discretion and moderation.

On being told of the death of the Prince of Condé, when, as King of Navarre, he felt very fensibly the loss which he had sustained, and knew to what dangers and difficulties he singly remained exposed, without a sriend to affist and advise him; he exclaimed, "God alone is my "refuge and support: in him alone I trust, "and I shall not be consounded *:" an exclamation (says Abbé Brotier) worthy of the Chief of the family of Bourbon, whose motto is "Espoir," "Hope."

After the entire defeat of the party of the League in France, a tradefman stopped the * An ingenious young man came to London some years ago in the hope of getting some employment. Unsuccessful in his attempt, and reduced to extreme poverty, he had intended to throw himself into the Thames. On passing near the Royal Exchange to effect his daring and desperate purpose, he saw the carriage of the late excellent Mr. Jonas Hanway, under the arms of which was this motto, "Never depair." The singular occurrence of this sentence had such an effect on the mind of the young man, that he immediately desisted from his horrid design, gained soon afterwards a considerable establishment, and died in good circumstances, in the common course of mortality.

camp equipages of the celebrated La Noue; who complaining to Henry of it, the latter told him, "Though we have been victorious "over our enemies, we have not on that account dispensed from the just demands of our creditors; and can you think it a hardship to "pay your debts, when I do not pretend to dispense myself from paying mine?" He then took out of his pocket some jewels, which he gave to La Noue to redeem his carriages.

Of the readiness of reply and good-humour of this great Prince, the following anecdote is told by Brotier:

The Spanish Ambassador at the Court of Henry was one day enquiring of him the character of his Ministers. "You shall see "what they are in a minute," said the Monarch. On seeing M. de Silleri, the Chancellor, come into the drawing-room, he said to him, "Sir, I am very uneasy at a beam that is "good for nothing, and which seems to threaten "to fall upon my head."—"Sire," replied Silleri, "you should consult your Architect; let "every thing be well examined, and let him "go to work; but there is no hurry." Henry next saw M. de Villeroi, to whom he spoke as he had done to Silleri. "Sire," replied Villeroi, without looking at the beam, "you are " very right; the beam is very dangerous in-" deed." At last the President Jeannin came in, to whom Henry made a fimilar address as to the former Ministers, "Sire," faid the Prefident, "I do not know what you mean. The " beam is a very good one."—" But," replied the King, "do not I fee the light through the " crevices, or is my head difordered?"-" Go. " go, Sire," returned Jeannin, " be quite at " your ease; the beam will last as long as you " will." Then turning to the Spanish Minister, Henry observed to him, "Now I think you are " well acquainted with the characters of my " three Ministers. The Chancellor has no " opinion at all, Villeroi is always of my opi-" nion; and Jeannin speaks as he really thinks, " and always thinks properly."

Henry, on his marriage with Many of Medicis, placed Madame de Guercheville (whose virtue he had attempted to seduce without success) about her person; giving as a reason, that as she really was a Lady of Honour, she ought to be Done a'Honneur to a Queen.

When he besieged Paris, Henry permitted those persons to come out of the town unmolested lefted through his army who were defirous to quit that city, then fuffering the most horrid famine and fickness; observing, " I do not " wonder that the chief persons of the League " and the Spaniards have fo little compassion " for these poor people; they are merely their " tyrants; but I, who am their father and their " King, cannot bear to hear of the calamities " they fuffer without shuddering, and being " afflicted to the very bottom of my foul, and " without defiring eagerly to put a ftop to " them. I cannot help those who are possessed " with the Demon of the League from perish-" ing with it; but to those who implore my " clemency, I will ever extend my arms; they " shall not suffer for the crimes of others."

Some one was faying before this Prince, "how happy Kings were."—"They are not," replied he, "fo happy as you imagine them to be. Kings are either bad or good men. "If they are bad men, they bear within them- felves their own plague and torment. If they are good men, they find from other people a "thousand causes of uneasiness and affliction." A good king feels the misfortunes of all his fubjects; and in a great kingdom what innumerable sources are there of affliction!"

Henry, naturally chearful himself, loved chearfulness in other persons. "I cannot," faid he, "willingly employ a melancholy per"fon, for a man that is ill-humoured to him"felf, cannot easily be good-humoured to other "persons. What satisfaction can be procured
"from a man who is dissatisfied with him"felf?"

His Courtiers one day complimenting him upon the strength of his constitution, and telling him that he must live to be eighty years of age; he replied, "The number of our days is "reckoned. I have often prayed to God for grace, but never for a long life. A man "who has lived well, has always lived long enough, however early he may die."

When some one was making a great eulogium upon the riches of the kingdom of Spain, and adding that France was full of the piastres of that country; Henry replied, "When these piastres remain in Spain, it is a mark of the riches of that kingdom, as, when they are seen out of that kingdom, it is a mark of its indigence. Indeed the galleons of Spain bring into that country eight millions of piastres, but four of these millions are sent into France for our corn, our wine, our salt, our cloths, and our wool. These are our mines;

- mines; they enrich us without incurring the "dangers of the fea, or marriaging our fubjects.
- " The Spaniards come to France to buy of
- " us, we never go to them: they do not give
- " us their money, but pay it to us *."

Reflecting one day on the tranquillity which France was enjoying, whilft the greater part of Europe was at war, or in a near state of becoming so; he said, "Thank God, though we " have had the misfortune to have been upon the theatre of war, at prefent we are only " fpectators."

Henry, though divorced from his first wife Margaret de Valois, ever behaved to her with kindness and good-humour. The following letter of his to that Princess was published a few years ago at Paris:

" Ma Seur.

٠Ļ.

- "IAY ete byen ayse daprandre de vos nou-" velles par le sr. de fuyjac par le quel vous
- 46 aprandres des myennes & come la goutte
- mayant quyte aus pyes ma prys au genoux
- es mes mayntenant je man porte myeus & espere
- * Charles the Fifth used to say even in his time, "Every thing abounds in France; in Spain, every thing is wanting.
- " En France tout abonde, tout manque en Espagne."
  - " demayn

" demayn coure un cheureuyl & mardy un " cerf & sy de la au hors je vays en amandant « come je lespere je sere pour vous voyr dans " la fyn de la semene cependant je vous dyre " que cest la moyndre chose que vous pouves " atandre de moy que le comandemant de " lespedysyon du don que je vous ay set pour le " rapt quy a ete fet de la petyte fylle dudyt " sr. de fuyjac encore que avant la receptyon " de la vre jy eusse pourveu de facon quyl an " aura tout contantement sy est ce que conoy-" fant que vous lafexyones yl vera come pour " lamour de vous je lafexyone & ce refantyra " de lefet de vore pryere & recomandasyon " come vous par tout ce quy depandra de moy " quy fuys

" vre byen bon pere
" HENRY."

" ce xe aut a monceau."
" A ma Seur la Royne Margueryte."

In 1599, when the Duke of Savoy came to Paris to accommodate his dispute with Henry respecting the Marquisate of Saluces, Henry was advised to keep him a prisoner till he had come to an agreement concerning it. The Monarch replied, "Whoever gave me that "advice can be no true friend of mine, but a "person who would destroy my honour. Who" ever affects my good faith, gives me more " uncafiness than if he affected my throne."

Henry used to deplore those unfortunate disputes which divided Europe, and said, that if the Christian Princes would but unite themselves, in one year they might destroy the Turkish Empire, more particularly when all the principal persons of that empire were discontented, and whilst Persia was an enemy so formidable to it.

When he was told of the defeat and loss of the gallies belonging to the State of Malta, he exclaimed, "How melancholy all this is! Whilft "the Christian Republic should increase, it diminishes. We are like those madmen who tear the persons in pieces that are bringing them affistance."

When he was told what judgment his subjects were sometimes forming of himself and of his actions, he used to say, "I remain alone upon the threne, and am seen there by many persons of different situations. I am on an eminence, they are in a valley. We judge but impersectly of those objects that are at a great distance from us: so my subjects judge of me."

On the Christmas-day of 1609 Henry went with his Court to the Church of Sc. Gervais at Paris, to hear a celebrated Preacher; who, vain of the honour of having so illustricus a hearer as his Sovereign, foon interrupted the thread of his discourse, and apostrophized Heavy. After having paid him the highest compliments on the clemency, the justice, and the humanity of his reign, he infifted upon many points, which, more like a politician than a divine, he thought necessary for the good of religion and the safety of the state. Henry heard him without the least emotion, and on going out of church merely faid, "Why, the preacher of to-day did not er entirely fill up his hour." The day afterwards Henry came to hear him again, when meeting him as he was going into the pulpit, he faid to him, " My Father, every one expected that at this time you should be in the Bastile, but the opinions of the world and those of myself do not always go together. " I am much obliged to you for the zeal that " you have shewn for my salvation. Continue, " I beg of you, to request it of God for me, se and contribute to it yourself by your good se advice. In whatever place, and at whatever time, you shall think fit to give it to me, « you will always find me well inclined to fol-" low it. I have only to request of you, that « you vou will not let your zeal get the better of vour discretion when you think fit to give " me advice in public, and that you would es desist from those invectives which may alie-" nate the love, and diminish the respect my "fubjects owe to me. You know my extreme " jealouly respecting the former, and the extreme delicacy that attends the latter. Ex-" cept in public, at any private audience you " may give as much latitude to your zeal as you please. On my part, I will bring to it " all that docility of which I am capable: " and if my weakness will permit me to go " with you, it will be more my fault than " yours if I do not become better. Once for " all, continue, I beg, your regard to me, and " be affured of my constant protection."

The Jesuits, on account of their learning and their very agreeable manners, were great favourites with this Prince. He used to tell them, they had two Generals; "the Gown, "and the Sword. The first was at Rome; the fecond was himself."

The Duchess de la Tremouille, who was a Huguenot, was one day repeating to Henry some scandal respecting Father Cotton, one of the Jesuits that was the most patronized by vol. IV.

Henry,

Henry, and who was his Confessor. Henry replied, "Madam, do but attend to the spirit of your religion: it prevents you from believing in the Pope, at the same time that it inclines you to believe a calumny."

When some of the Huguenot Ministers represented to him that their sect could not continue fo long as there were Jesuits in France, he replied, "I will endeavour to preserve you both, " fo that the good may fave the bad, and, if " possible, that no one may perish." He was likewise told by the Huguenots, that he suffered himself to be led by the Jesuits; "Oh, no," replied he, " for I lead both Jesuits and Hu-" guenots." He faid to the Deputies of the Parliament who wished to prevent that Order from being established in France, "When I " had ferious thoughts of introducing the Je-" fuits at Paris, two forts of persons opposed it, " the Huguenots, and the Catholic Priests of " irregular living; both of whom reproached " them with endeavouring to attract to them " men of learning and of wit: now for that I " esteem them. When I make levies, I wish f to pick out the best troops for the purpose, " and I am anxious that none should enter " into the Parliaments but worthy and excel-" lent subjects; so that throughout my king-" dom se dom merit should be the mark that dis-"tinguishes honours. The Jesuits forced them-" felves, fay their adversaries, into my king-" dom. I am fure that I forced my way into " it. Clement, who affaffinated my predecef-" for, did not accuse them of being accomve plices with him; and if a Jesuit had been concerned with him in that horrid action. " (of which I wish ever to lose the remem-" brance) must the whole Order suffer on his " account? should all the Apostles have been of driven out of Judea for one Judas? The " horrors of the League should no longer be " imputed to them. It was the error of the times; and they, as well as many others, were " concerned in it from the best intentions."

Before the battle of Ivry, which decided the fate of the Crown of France, this magnanimous Prince made the following pious address to God: "If it should please thee not to bestow " the Crown upon me, or thou feeft that I am likely to be one of those Kings whom " thou givest to mankind in thy wrath, take " away my life as well as the Crown! Grant " me to-day to be the victim of thy wife will! "Grant that my death may deliver France " from the calamities of war, and that my " blood may be the last that shall be shed in " this

H 2

" this dispute !" Immediately before he charged the enemy, he faid to the regiment which he headed, "My Comrades, if you follow my " fortune, remember I follow yours. I am de-" termined either to conquer or to die with " you. Keep your ranks, I beseech you, but " if the violence of the engagement should " make you quit them, endeavour to rally " again; that enfures victory. You will rally " under those three trees that you see there on " the eminence; and if you should lose your " ftandards, do not lose fight of my white " plume of feathers; you will ever find it in " the road to honour and to victory." When the enemy's ranks were broken, he exclaim-" ed, Sauvez les François & mainbasse sur " l'Etranger."

Soon after the entrance of Henry into Paris, the Spanish Ambassador, who had been there during the time of the League, said, that the city was so altered he hardly knew it. "It is," said Henry, "because the father of the family "is present, and takes care of his children, and "so they prosper."

Henry once gave into some measures which his subjects did not appear to approve of, and were therefore free in their conversations upon them. them. "My thoughts," faid Henry, "are "too elevated, and my defigns too deep for the "mass of my people to fathom. They will, "however, see by the event that God is my guide. With respect to them, the peace and the tranquillity which they enjoy, allow them opportunities to speak. Their words fly away, whilst my actions remain."

Henry used to say, that the world would be aftonished to find Queen Elizabeth of England a maid, Maurice Prince of Orange a man of courage, and himself a good Catholick.

"This Prince," fays Brotier, " fo great, fo amuable, fo good, was well acquainted with his own merit, but had in general the misfor"tune that those who were about him had not the proper degree of feeling respecting it."

On the day of his death he had heard mass at the church of the Feuillans at Paris. On his return, the Duke of Guise and Bassompierre met him walking in the Gardens of the Thuilleries, where he talked with them so pleasantly, that he kept them in a continual laugh; and the Duke of Guise could not help saying to the Monarch, embracing him at the same time, "Sire, vous êtes à mon giè un des plus agréables hommes du monde." The King then turning to him and Bassompierre, said in a grave tone of voice, "None of you sufficiently understand me: " but I shall die one of these days, and when " vou have lost me, then you will know my " value, and what difference there is between " me and other men." These melancholy ideas were, for some days before he died, continually crowding into his mind. The day before his death, he saw from a close tribune the ceremony of the coronation of his fecond wife, Mary of Medicis, at St. Denis. The spectators, placed upon benches, filled the choir of the church to the very top of the roof of it. Struck with the immensity of the crowd, he said to Father Cotton, his Confessor, "You cannot guess on " what I was thinking just now, when I was " looking at this great concourse of people. " I was thinking of the last Judgment, and of 46 the account we are all then to give of our " actions."

By the kindness of Mr. Planta, of the British Museum, this Article of Henry the Fourth is enriched with two Letters of that great Prince, when King of Navarre, which have never been printed, and of which the Originals remain in the British Museum. One was addressed to M. du Plessis, his Minister at the Court of Queen Elizabeth, the other to Mr.

Anthony Bacon, brother to the celebrated Chancellor of that name.

a copy of a letter of henry king of navarre " (SINCE HENRY THE FOURTH OF FRANCE), " TO MONS' DU PLESSYS. DATED ROCHELLE, " SEPT. 23, 1586. " Mons' Dupleffys parce que Jay entendu " que Busanval a receu a Londres quinse cens " Ecus pour Mons' de Bacon & que Jay eu " playnte de ce que les ayant de fy longtems Il " ne les a fait tenir au dyt S' de Bacon-Jay " bien voulu vous écrire la presante dautant " que je desireroys le gratyfyer tant pour son " meryte & en faveur de ceus a qui Il aparty-" ent que J'estyme beaucoup que pour etre de " la Nation Angloyse pour vous pryer de le " fecouryr de quelque somme atendant quyl " puysse resevoyer ce que le dyt Busanval a " pour lui entre mayns. Je panse byen que " vous aves peu de moyans par de la mays ce " me fera chofe fort agreable fy vous lui pouves " baylier & fere fournyr jusques a troys ou " quatre cens Ecus-vous pourres mander " audyt Busanval de fere tenyr par quelque " voye (comme ill sen peut trouver plusyeurs) " ce quyl a receu pour lui & fere rembourser " ce que vous luy avés fet fournyr Ce que

" massurant que vous feres Je ne vous en dyray

" davantage sy ce n'est que je seray byen ayse

" que le dyte S' de Bacon ayt en cela contan-

"temant. Adyeu Mons' du Pleffys,

" ceft

" Votre tres afectyonné Mettre & " parfet Amy."

" De la Rochelle, ce xxiii de Settambre."

"COPY OF A LETTER OF HENRY, KING OF NAVARRE,
"TO M' DE BACON (MR. ANTHONY BACON).
"DATED SEPT. 23, 1586.

"Mons' de Bacon Je suys byen marry de ce que Busanval na set autre devoyr de vous fere tenyre la somme quyl avoyt reseus pour vous car il sayt combyen J'estyme ceus a quy vous apartenes & combyen Je vous ayme Je mande a Mons' Duplessys de vous se-couryr de ce quyl pourra atendant que vous ayes receu vos denyers Je croy quyl le fera encores que la necessyte des afaites et des charges de dela soyt grande J'eusse byen des syré que vostre santé vous eust permys d'estre aupres de moy, car J'eusse donné ordre que vous n'eussys poynt tombé en telles dysy-cultés Je vous prye setes tousjours estat de moy et vous affurés que Je suys

" Vre afectyone et affure Amy,

" HENRY."

Abbé de Marolles, in his Memoirs, thus defcribes the state of France under this excellent Monarch:

"The idea," fays he, "of those days still " gives me pleasure. I pass over in my mind " with an inconceivable fatisfaction the beauty " of the country at that time. It appears to " me as if the country was more fertile then "than it is now, that the meadows were more " verdant than they are at present, and that " the trees bore more and better fruit. What " a pleasure it was to hear the warbling of the " birds, the lowing of the cattle, and the " ruftic fongs of the shepherd! The cattle "then remained fafe in the fields, and the " husbandmen in perfect fecurity, ploughed up " the furrows to put in the grain, which the " tax-gatherers and the foldiers had not then " begun to ravage. The peasant had then his " little cottage, his neat furniture, and all that " was necessary for him, and slept quietly in " his own bed. When the feafon of harvest " was come, it was a great pleafure to fee the reapers, bending one over another, despoil " the furrows of their corn, and gather up their " treasures, which the more robust tied toge-"ther, while the others loaded the waggons " with the sheaves, and the children that were " keeping "Exemply their cattle at a distance, gleaned the ears of corn which a good-natured and an affected forgetfulness had left behind them. The stronger girls of the village reaped the corn as well as the boys, and their mutual labour was occasionally interrupted by a rustic meal, that was eaten sometimes under the shade of an apple or a pear tree, which let down its branches, covered with fruit, even into their very hands.

After the harvest, the peasants fixed upon fome holiday to meet together and have a little regale (by them called the Harvest Gossing), to which they invited not only each other, but even their masters, who pleased them very much when they condescended to partake of it.

"When these goods folks married any of their children, it was a pleasure to see the ceremony; for beside the fine clothes of the bride, that was nothing less than a red gown, and a cap embroidered with foil and glass beads, the parents were dressed in their blue clothes, well platted, that they drew out for the occasion from their old chests, perfumed with lavender, dried roses, and 10se- mary. Favours in honour of the ceremony "were were not forgotten upon the occasion. All the persons that were invited wore them, either tied to their girdles or their sleeves. There was a rustic concert of bagpipes, slutes, and hautboys; and after a very plentiful dinner the dancing lasted till the evening. No one then complained of the excess of the imposts. Every one paid his little tax with cheerfulness, and I do not remember ever to have heard it said, that any march of soldiers had ever pillaged a single village, much less desolated whole provinces, as we have but too often seen since that time by

I hate that drum's discordant sound,
 Parading round, and round, and round;
 To thoughtless youth it pleasure yields,
 And lures from cities and from fields,
 To fell their liberty for charms
 Of tawdry lace and glatt'ring arms,
 And when Ambition's voice commands,
 To march, and fight, and fall in foreign lands.

I hate that drum's discordant sound,
Parading round, and round, and round;
To me it talks of ravaged plains,
And burning towns, and ruined swains,
And mangled limbs, and dying groans,
And widows tears, and orphans moans,
And all that Misery's hand bestows,
To fill the catalogue of human woes.

" Poems by Mr. Scott, of Amwell, Her's"

than Henry. His wish that every peasant in his kingdom might have a fowl in his pot every Sunday, and his efforts to render that wish effectual, by encouraging agriculture and by imposing easy taxes; his humanity of disposition, his easiness of access, and the frankness of his character, have made a French Poet say, perhaps rather too strongly of him as his Sovereign,

Seul Roi dont le peuple a garde la memoire:

The only King whose Royal name revered
Lives in the grateful memory of the people *.

Activity was one of the striking seatures in the character of Henry. This made that great General the Duke of Parma say of him, "that all the other Generals of his time carried on war like lions and tigers, while he carried it on like an eagle."

Henry's device was Hercules taming a monster, with this motto:

Invia virtuti nulla est via:
Virtue pursues each honest path to glory.

* He appears to have forgotten the excellent Louis XII. who had every virtue that Henry possessed, without the least alloy of frailty or of vice.

"Those who eat and drink much," said Henry, "are like persons absolutely buried in their flesh *. They are incapable of any thing great. If," added he, "I occasionally indulge myself in the pleasures of the table, it is merely to enliven and inspirit my mind."

When he was informed that some of his troops had been living at discretion upon the frontier, he sent word to their Officers, "If you do not put a stop to these disorders, your heads shall answer for them. For know, "Sirs, by the honour of God I swear, that whoever takes any thing from my people, "takes it away from myself."

Being congratulated on a victory obtained by his army, in which many lives were lost on the part of his forces, he replied, "It is no satis-"faction to me to see so many of my sub-"jects lying dead upon the field. I lose much "more than I gain."

"Henry," fays Voltaire very beautifully, learned to rule, by being educated in the hard school of Adversity." His situation from early to middle life, had been a fuccession of danger, exertion, toil, and difficulty. This better fitted him for the arduous task of reigning, by making him acquainted with every circumstance incident to humanity, and made him feel for those miseries so natural to mankind, of which he had himself participated.

<sup>* &</sup>quot;Gourmandise est le vice des ames qui n'ont point de trempe.—Rousseau.

His grandfather, Jean D'Albret, King of Navarre, carried his desire of making him hardy so far (anxious that heroism should be transferred to him from his mother, and that to be able to suffer, and be patient under sufferings, should make as much a part of his hereditary constitution as the seatures of his countenance and the frame of his body), that he told his Daughter, who was then with child of Henry, that if she would sing during the pains of parturition the well-known Bearnois hymn to the Virgin, that begins, he would give her a gold chain which had belonged to her Mother, and which he knew she was very anxious to possess. She complied with her father's request very readily, and received the chain.

Notre Dame, au bout de pent, Aidez moi à cette heure! Our Lady at the bridge's foot *, Support me in this painful hour!

* At the entrance of every town, and more particularly on every bridge, in Old France, there was placed an image of the Virgin, or of fome Saint, to whom the inhabitants part their devotions.

" As foon as Henry was born," fays the Abbé Brotier, "Henri d'Albret his grandfather "took him in his arms, and gave his mother " his will in a golden box, telling her, The box is yours, my girl, but the child is mine. He " instantly began upon that plan of hardy and manly education which he intended to give " him, by rubbing his lips with a clove of gar-" lick, and by putting a drop of strong wine er into his mouth. He was much pleased with "the child, as he grew bigger and stronger, and " used to shew him to every one, exclaiming, "See what a Lion my Ewe has produced! " He caused him to be brought up like the " children of the peafants of his country, with-" out allowing the least distinction to be made 66 between him and them, making him undergo " the fame ftrong exercise which they did, and " permitting no one to call him Prince *, or " to fent to ferve abroad by his farmer or a very early age, who gave

"to grant him the least indulgences. Then," adds the Abbé, "foon afterwards, the vivacity, "the penetration, the affability that charac- terised Henry, began to make its appear- ance."—Paroles Memorables recueilles par L'Abbe Brotier, Paris, 12mo. 1790.

The two following Letters from this Prince to the Chancellor de Bellievre are copied from the MS. in the British Museum.

" M. De belyevre, ce mot par vacquyer cegretere de ma seur est pour vous recomander tout ce quy la concernera et que je luy ay cydevant accordé a ce que vous tenyés la mayn quelle an Jouysse come cest ma volonté et que sur cella vous oyés le dit vacquyer audemeurant je ne puys trouver questrange de ce que ma court de parlemant contre ma volonté et les arrests que Jay donnés an mon conseyl pour reson dun etat de mes cegreteres que je donnay a houdayer syls dun de mes gave him two or three horses and five hundred livres.

"He must learn to shift," said he, "and not be allowed all the indulgences which are usually granted to young men of his rank. He will then learn to know what he is about, and to make a virtue of necessity. No one can ever know any thing well, who has not been taught to encounter difficulties."

X

" anivens cervyteurs et en faveur de ma seur le
" jour de son maryage veuylle mayntenyr dulys
" an cet etat contre ma volonté et ce que Jan
" ay ordoné pouvoyés a cette afere tellement que je nan oye plus parler et setes conoytre a
" ma court de parlemant que je veus etre obey,
" a Dieu M'. de belyevre (su) lequel Je prye
" vous avoyr an sa garde ce xxixme ceptambre
" a sontaynebleau.

" HENRY."

" Mr. le chanceiyer, Jay done a ma fame " les denyers quy provyendront de la creafyon « de deus ofyces de conseylers an ma court de " parlemant de bretagne pour acheter des meu-66 bles pour sa meson de monceaus lesquels il est es besovn de creer pour randre les deus seances es egales auffy que le fonds des gages ne ce " prand poynt fur mes fynances Je vous prye donc de seler ledyt atandu que cest ma vo-" lonté come auffy la comutasyon de peyne de 46 lamande honorable a me feie cervyse a mets " que Jay acordee et quy vous cera presantee e cest chose de peu et quy desameroyt un " honeste home quy apartyent a de mes cervy-" reurs Jay feu auffy quevous naves ancores " iele la declarasyon des papegaus de bretagne " come vous mavyes promvs et de la remetre " antre antre les mains de Mr de Sylery ce que je vous prye de fere au plustost car ces longueurs ruynent touttes les afayres et la bayler audyt Sr de Sylery auquel Jescrys de la retyrer de vos mayns et vous feres chose que Jaure tres agreable quy me gardera de vous an dyre davantage pour pryer Dieu Mr le chancelyer vous avoyr an sa garde ce 2° Avril a sontenebleau.

" HENRY."

MARGUERITE DE VALOIS, FIRST WIFE TO HENRY THE FOURTH.

WHEN Charles the Ninth gave his fifter in marriage to Henry the Fourth, he faid, "Jai" donné ma soeur en mariage à tous les Huguenots de mon Royaume." She soon began to live upon ill terms with her husband, and was confined in one of the fortresses of Navarre. She thus forcibly describes the effect of solitude upon her mind:

"I Received these two advantages from my misfortunes and my confinement: I acquired a taste for reading, and I gave into devotion; two things for which I never should have had the least taste, had I remained amidst the pomps

" pomps and the vanities of the world. For these advantages I am percaps not so much indebted to fortune as to Providence, who had the goodness to engage for me two such powerful remedies against the evils which were to happen to me in future. Sorrow, contrary to gaiety, which carries our thoughts and our actions out of ourselves, makes the mind rally within itself, exert all its powers to reject the evil, and to seek after the good, in hope to find out that sovereign and supreme good, which is the readiest way to bring itself to the knowledge and love of the Deity."

The Memoirs of Marguerite are very entertaining. The translation of Plutarch's Lives by Amyot was a very favourite book with her in her confinement, and she appears to have transfused into her Memoirs that naiveté & vieux Gaulois which we admire so much in his style.

Marguerite, who understood Latin, on seeing a poor man lying upon a dunghill, exclaimed, Pauper ubique jacet.

In any place, in any bed, The poor man rests his weary head. The man, to her aften fament, replied,

In thalam s hac no ?e tuis Regina, jacerem, Si v , hoc ess.t, pauper u'ique jacet.

A., iteous Queen, were this but true, This night would repose with you.

Marguerite all-humouredly retorted:

Carceris in tenebris plorans had notte faceres, Si varum hoc effet, pauper abique jacet. If this were true, thou wretched wight, A Gaol should be thy bed to-night; Where stripes and fetters, whips and pain, Thy tongue's strange licence should restrain.

Marguerite was divorced from Henry on his acceffion to the throne of France, and led up Mary de Medicis, his fecond wife, to the altar at St. Denis to be crowned. She was extremely charitable to the poor, and liberal to scholars and men of talents. Her palace at Paris was the rendezvous of the beaux esprits of that Capital. She was beautiful in her person, very fascinating in her manners, and danced with such peculiar grace, that the celebrated Don John of Austria went incognito from Bruffels to Paris to see her dance.

Beside Memoirs of her Life, which are imperfect, she wrote some Poems. In the former she thus describes what passed in her bedchamber on the morning of St. Bartholomew .

" My husband rose early in the morning to " play at tennis, before he should see the King. "He and his Gentleman left me. I. per-" ceiving that it was day, and supposing that " the danger which my fifter had predicted to " me was over, overcome by watchfulness, told " my old nurse to shut the door of the room, " that I might fleep more at my ease. About " an hour afterwards, I was awakened out of " a very profound fleep by hearing the door " knocked at very loudly, and by hearing a " man cry out, Navarre! Navarre! My " nurse, thinking that it was the King my hus-" band, who wished to come in, ran to the "door and opened it immediately, The per-" fon, however, that knocked thus violently, " was a Monsieur de Tejan, who was wound-" ed in the elbow with a fword, and had like-" wife another wound in the arm with a hal-" bert; and who was closely purfued by three " dragoons, who all of them together forced "themselves into the room. Tejan, anxious " to fave his life, threw himself upon my bed. " I, perceiving myself held down by him, threw " myself upon the side of the bed, and he after

" me,

"me, taking hold of my waist. I had not the least acquaintance with him, and in my flight did not know whether the soldiers intended mischief to him of to myself. At last however, it pleased God that Monsicur de Nancey, Captain of the King's Guards, came in to us, who, finding me in this situation (although he was a man of great humanity), could not refrain from laughter; and storming at the soldiers for their insolant intrusion, sent them away, and granted me the life of the poor man, who still held by me. I afterwards ordered his wounds to be diessed, and himself put to bed in my closet till he was recovered.

"When I had changed my shift (which was covered with blood), M. de Nancey told me what had happened, and informed me that the King my husband was with the King my brother in his apartment, and that not a hair of his head would be touched. Then making me throw my night-gown over me, he conducted me to the room of my fister the Duches of Lorraine, and which I entered more dead than alive. As I was passing through the anti-room (the doors of which were all open), I saw a Gentleman of the name of Bourse, in endeavouring to escape

" fome foldiers that were pursuing him, fall "down dead nearly at my feet, run through " with a halbert. I fell down at no great dif-" tance from him on the other fide, in a fwoon, " into the arms of Monsieur de Nancey, firmly " perfuaded that the fame thrust of the halbert " had run us both through. Recovering, how-" ever, I made the best of my way to my " fifter's bed-chamber, where I found M. de " Mcoffins, first Gentleman of the Bed-" chamber to the King my husband, and " Armagnac, his first Valet-de-Chambre, who " came running up to me, defiring me to fave their lives. I then hastened to pay my re-" spects to the King and Queen; when, fall-" ing upon my knees, I requested them to " fpare the lives of these Gentlemen; with " which request at last they complied."

SULLY.

THE Pope having once written a letter to M. de Sully upon his becoming Minister, which ended with his Holiness's wishes that he might enter into the right way; Sully answered, that on his part he never ceased to pray for the conversion of his Holiness.

A cotemporary writer thus describes this great Minister.

"He was," fays he, "a man of order, exact, frugal, a man of his word, and had no foolish expences either of play or of any thing else that was unsuitable to the dignity of his character. He was vigilant, laborious, and expedited business. He spent his whole time in his employments, and gave none of it to his pleasures. With all these qualifications he had the talent of diving to the bottom of every thing that was submitted to him, and of discovering every entanglement and difficulty with which sinanciers, when they are not honest men, endeavour to conceal their tricks and their rogueries."

When the conspiracy of Biron against Henry the Fourth was discovered, Henry told Sully, that a great number of persons, even some amongst the highest Nobility, were concerned in it, and desired him to guess who they were. "Good God, Sire! suppose any man to be a "traitor? That is what I will never do."

Sully used to say, that pasturage and agriculture were two teats to a kingdom, that were worth all the gold of Peru.

In spite of the superiority of his talents, and the purity of his intentions, this great Minister was always harraffed by calumnies and mifreprefentations. Many of them were studiously related to Henry, who occasionally mentioned them to him, to hear in what manner he defended himfelf. Once, after a conversation of three hours on fubjects like thefe, he embraced Sully on coming out of his anti-chamber before all his court, and faid, "I esteem you as the best and " the most innocent man that ever was, as well " as the most loyal and the most useful servant " I ever poffeffed." Then turning round to fome of Sully's enemies who were prefent, he added, "I wish earnestly to let you all know, " that I love Sully better than ever, and that " death alone can diffolve my esteem for " him."

Sully, in conformity with the principles of commerce that obtained in his time, wished his Sovereign to iffue an edict prohibiting the use of filk; looking upon it as a luxury imported from a foreign country, that would take away money out of the kingdom of France. Henry replied to him, "Why, my good Rosny, "I had rather fight the King of Spain in three "pitched battles, than engage with all those gentry of police, of finance, of the customs, "and

" and especially with their wives and daughters, that you will set upon me by your whimsical and unreasonable regulation."

Madame d'Entragues, Henry's favourite mistress, was extremely angry with Sully one day, on his not immediately paying to her brother fome gratuity which that Monarch had ordered him. "The King," faid she to him, "would " act very fingularly indeed, if he were to dif-"-please persons of quality merely to give into "your notions. And pray, Sir, to whom " should a K ng be kind, if not to his Rela-"tions, his Courtiers, and his Mistreffes?" "That might be very well, Madam," replied Sully, " if the King took the money out of " his own purse; but in general he takes it out " of those of shopkeepers, artizans, labourers, " and farmers. There persons enable him to " live. One mafter is enough for us, and we " have no occasion for such a number of " Courtiers, of Princes, and of King's Mis-" treffes."

Henry gave Sully one day the contract of marriage into which he had entered with Mademoiselle d'Entragues, to read; who said, after having read it, "Sire, will you promise me not to be angry?" Henry replied, "Yes, Sully,

"I promise you that I will not be angry." Sully tore the contract in pieces immediately, faying, "Sire, this is the use you ought to make "of it."—"What, Sir, are you mad, to be"have in this manner?" said Henry. "It is "true, Sire," replied Sully, "that I am a "madman, and would be so great a madman, "as to be the only person mad in France."

The Lady whose contract of marriage with Henry Sully had thus torn in pieces called him one day "Valet," in the presence of his Sovereign, because he would not assist her views of ambition. "This is too much, Ma-"dam," exclaimed Henry. "I had sooner part with six mistresses like yourself, than with one servant like Sully, whom you dare to call Valet in my presence. My ancestors have not distained to ally themselves with his, I assure you."

Sully was one of the most laborious Ministers that ever existed. He rose at sour o'clock in the morning. The first two hours after he got up were employed in reading and in expediting the papers that lay upon his table; this he called "netroyer la tapis." At seven o'clock he attended Council, and the rest of the morning was ipent with his Sovereign in transactions.

ing the different business with which he was entrusted. At twelve o'clock he dined on a service of ten dishes, with some select guests. After dinner he gave an audience, where every body was admitted: first the ecclesiastics, both Catholics and Huguenots; then the farmers, and the persons of meaner rank; and persons of quality succeeded to them. After his audience, he returned to his closet, where he read and wrote till supper-time, when he ordered his doors to be shut, and gave himself up to the pleasures of society with a few friends; and at ten o'clock he went to bed.

On the death of his Sovereign and friend Henry the Fourth, he retired to his Chateau of Villebon, where he composed his Memoirs by the title of "Economies Royales," which were printed in four volumes solio. These were afterwards put into better order and more modern French, and many of the details they contained retrenched by the Abbé de l'Ecluse; and this is the Edition of the Memoirs of that great and good Minister which is at present read.

In the retirement of Villebon he lived thirty years, feldom or never coming to Court. Louis the Thirteenth however, wishing to have his opinion upon some matters of consequence; sent for him to come to him at Paris, when the good old man obeyed his summons, but not with the greatest alacrity. The gay Courtiers, on seeing a man drest unlike to themselves, and of grave and serious manners totally different from their own, and which appeared to be those of the last Century, turned Sully into ridicule, and took him off to his face. Sully, perceiving this, said coolly to the King, "Sir, when your father, of glorious memory, did me the honour to consult me on any matter of importance, he first sent away all the jesters and all the bussoons of his "Court."

At his table at Villebon he always kept up the frugality to which he had been accustomed in early life in the army. His table consisted of ten dishes, dressed in the plainest and most simple manner. The Courtiers reproached him often with the simplicity of his table. He used to reply, in the words of an Antient, "If the guests are men of sense, there is sufficient for them; if they are not, I can very well dismense with their company."

Sully dined at the upper end of the hall with the persons of his own age, at a table apart.

apart. The young people were ferved at a table by themselves. The venerable host gave as a reason for this arrangement, that the persons of different ages might not be mutually tiresome to each other.

Abbé de Longuerue fays, "that the Duchess" of Nemours told him, that she had often "feen the good old man M. de Sully; that he "was so altered by being dismissed from his "employments of state, that there remained nothing about him which reminded you of the celebrated Minister of his name; and that his mind was entirely taken up with the management of his estate and of his family affairs.

"His fecretaries," adds the Abbé, "filled his Memoirs with faults which he was not in a ftate of mind to correct."

ARMAND DE BIRON

was a Marshal and Master of the Artillery of France, and was no less a man of learning than a great General.

"He lost," says Brotier, "no opportunity of instructing himself, and wrote down in his common-place book whatever he heard or met with that was worthy of his notice. These were called, Les Devines Tablettes de Bron."

No less liberal than brave, when his Maître d'Hotel advised him to make a reform in his household, and get rid of some of his supernumerary servants, giving as a reason, that he could do without them; "Perhaps so," replied Biron, "but let me know first, if they can do without me."

At the battle of Ivry, Henry the Fourth joined the Walloon Troops at the risk of his life, and left Biron with a corps de reserve, to prevent the enemy from rallying. When the engagement was over, Biron told his Sovereign, "Sire, this is not fair: you have done to-day what Biron should have done, and he has done what the King ought to have done."

"He had," fays Brotier, "the weakness too commonly incident to Generals—that of continuing rather than terminating a war.

He faid to his fon, who asked him to give him some troops for an action, which would be

- " be peculiarly favourable to the cause in
- " which they were engaged: You blockhead
- " you! what you wish then that we may be
- " fent to plant cabbages at our country feat?—
- " Quoi donc, marant, nous veux tu envoyer planter
- " des choux à Biron ?"

Biron wrote some Commentaries on his Military Expeditions; of which Brantôme laments the loss. He boasted that he had passed from the lowest rank in the Army to that of General, and said, that was the only legitimate way to become a Marshal of France. He had been wounded in seven different engagements. When he was made a Knight of the Holy Ghost, being required to produce his Letters of Nobility, he contented himself with exhibiting a few pieces of parchment to the Sovereign and the Commissioners, saying, "Sire, voila ma" Noblesse bien comprize." Then putting his hand upon his sword, he added, "Mais, Sire, "la voila mieux."

His device was a match burning, with these words: "Perst sed in arms." He gave Henry the Fourth the wise advice to remain in France, and not to fly into England or Switzerland, on the death of Henry the Third. The Marshal was vol. 14. K killed killed by a musques ball, at the siege of Epernay in 1592.

Biron was Godfather to the celebrated Cardinal de Richelieu, to whom he gave his own baptismal name of Armand.

CHARLES GONTAUT DE BIRON,

fon of the Marshal Biron mentioned in the preceding Article, was so early an excellent Officer, that at the age of fiftéen lie was chosen, by the common consent of the Army commanded by his Father, to supply his place as General, when the latter was prevented by his wounds from assuming that distinguished situation.

Biron used to say, that sometimes prudence was unnecessary in war.

He conspired against his Sovereign Henry the Fourth, who would have pardoned him, had he relied sufficiently upon his elemency and his gratitude to have confessed his treason to him. He who had so often looked upon death with intrepidity in the field, beheld it upon the scassod with the utmost fear and emotion:

tion; and the Executioner was obliged to do his fad office by flealth. Biron had ridiculed the quiet and refigned manner with which the amiable but unfortunate Earl of Effex met his fate, as bordering upon pufillanimity and cowardice. Nemefis is but too often upon the watch to revenge obloquy upon itself, and to render those persons justly obnoxious to its attacks, who have been liberal of them upon other persons.

Henry has been much blamed for not sparing the life of his fellow-soldier and companion, and the occasional cause of his victories. Biron was, however, so violent, so expensive, and so distatisfied with his Sovereign's behaviour to him, that he would perhaps have ever looked up to a Revolution to gratify his revenge, or to satisfy his necessities. He was extremely addicted to play, at which he lost such considerable sunts, that he used to say, "fe ne sçais sim ge mourrai sur un echastaut, mais je sçais bien que se ne mourrai pas à l'Hôpital."—" Fatal alternative," says D'Anquetil, "that but too often attends those who risk their for tunes on a die or a card."

Brotier fays, "that when Biron's friends" folicited his pardon from Henry; by way of

K 2 "palliating

" palliating his crime, they faid that his pride had made him oppose his Sovereign." Henry replied, " It is always agreeable to me to pardon, but my device is that of my kingdom:

Parcere subjectis et debellare superbos.
To spare the conquered, and subdue the proud."

Biron was so conscious of the fate which awaited him, that upon being told when he was in prison that he would soon be released, he replied, "Alas! I am not one of those "birds who are put into a cage to let go "again."

PRESIDENT JEANNIN

belonged to the detestable faction of the League, but, in conjunction with a few excellent men of his party, would not give into the horrid massacre of St. Bartholomew. He was President of the Parliament of Dijon when Henry the Fourth, on his taking possession of Paris, said that he would make him one of his Council of State. Jeannin excused himself by saying, that it was not just that he should preser an old Leaguer to so many distinguished persons, whose sidelity to him had never been suspected.

suspected. "I am certain, Sir," replied Henry, "that a person who has been faithful "to a Prince will not be desective in fidelity "to a King,"

A rich Country Gentleman of Burgundy, being much struck with Jeannin's eloquence in the Parliament of that Province, was very anxious to have him for his son-in-law, and waited upon him to tell him of his intention. On his asking him what property he possessed, Jeannin, pointing to his head, and to a small collection of Books in the room, said, "In "these, Sir, consist all my wealth and all my fortune."

Some Prince having asked Jeannin whose fon he was, he replied, "I am the son of "my own ment," Jeannin was Ambaffador from Henry the Fourth to the States-General of Holland, and negotiated the peace between that Republic and the Spaniards (one of the most difficult that ever took place) with such ability and impartiality, that he gained the considence of the two parties. Cardinal Bentivoglio says, that he had often heard Jeannin speak in the Council of State, where he appeared to carry in his manner and countenance all the dignity of his Mafter.

134

Henry faid of him, "I am obliged to gild feveral of my subjects to take off the edge of their malice. With respect to Jeannin, I have as yet contented myself with saying good things of him, without doing any for him."

Jeannin's "Memoirs of his Negotiations "with Holland" were published by himself. When Richelieu was banished to Avignon, he studied them very much, and professed himself greatly indebted to them for his knowledge of the difficult art of Negotiation.

Jeannin, though President of the Parliament of Dyon, used to say, "We are not always so well instructed in the Parliaments as the Prince and his Ministers are respecting what makes for the general good of the country. Sometimes the same thing taken separately appears unjust, which in the general is just."

Henry the Fourth, once finding a ftate-secret betrayed, said to his other Ministers, "See "amongst yourselves who it is that has be-"trayed * trayed us; I myself will answer for that good

" creature there (pointing to Jeannin), that he " has not done it."

CARDINAL D'OSSAT.

This eminent Negotiator was the fon of a fmith, and lost his Father and Mother when he was very young. At the age of nine, he was placed in the service of a young Nobleman of Auch; his Master was likewise an orphan, and they studied together. D'Ossat soon outstripped his Master, and became his Preceptor: he was afterwards called to the bar, and by degrees rose to the dignity of a Bishop and Cardinal. His negotiations at the Court of Rome procured the absolution of Henry the Fourth; a matter, at that time, of no small difficulty.

"He was a man," fays his Biographer, of great penetration, and took his measures with such precaution, that it is impossible to find a single error or mistake in any of them. He united in the highest degree politics and probity, honours with modesty, and dignities with disinterestedness. His letters, though upon subjects which now cease to interest, have been esteemed very much by Negotia-

- " tors. The late intelligent Sir James Porter
- " was extremely fond of them, and recom-
- " mended them as models of diplomatic com- " munication,"

THEODORE D'AUBIGNE.

HENRY THE FOURTH, King of France (then King of Navarre', going one day to Condillac, the country-feat of Francois de Foix, Bishop of Aire, defired him to permit him to fee his Cabinet of Curiofities. To this the Bishop confented, on condition that the King should take with him no persons who were men of ignorance, and void of curiofity. "With all my " heart, Uncle," replied the King; " I shall " introduce no one who is not more capable " of observing and of appreciating your Ca-" binet than myfelf." Coming in then to the Cabinet with the Sieurs Clerval, Du Pleffis, Du Sainte Angebonde, Pelision, and Theodore D'Aubigné; while the King and the rest were amufing themselves in seeing a cannon lifted up by a fmall machine which a boy of fix years of age had in his hand, and were very attentive to this operation, D'Aubigné observed a piece of black marble which ferved as a writing-defk to the Bishop; and having found a pencil, he wrote upon it this distich:

Non isthæc Princeps Regem tractare doceto, Sed doctå regni pondera serre manu.

Teach not the King to toys to give his care, But Empire's pond'rous weight with ease to bear.

Having done this, he covered over the piece of marble, and joined the company. When they came up to it, the Bishop said, "Sire, see this "is my writing-desk!" but having taken off the cover, and seeing the distich, he said, "Ah, "ah! a Man has been here, I see."—"Nay," said Henry, "what do you take us all for "Beasts then?" and turning to the Bishop, "Uncle," said he, "can you guess, by the "countenance of us, who has put this trick "upon you?" This sally of his Majesty afforded much amusement, D'Aubigné wrote the History of his Life, and addressed it to his Children. "My chil"dren," says he in the Presace to it, "Anti"quity will furnish you with directions and

"examples, in the lives of Emperors and of
"great men, how to behave against the at"tacks of enemies and of disobedient subjects.
"You will there see how they have resisted the "attacks of the one, and the rebellions of the "other;

" other; but it will never teach you that kind " of conduct which is fuited to common and " ordinary life: and this third kind of know-" ledge requiring more dexterity than the other " two, you have more occasion for instruction " in it, fince you are rather to imitate persons " of a middling station than those who are of " a diffinguished rank in life; having to strug-" gle against your equals, where there is more " occasion for address than for force. This " want of accommodation has often put Princes " in a perilous fituation. Henry the Great, the fourth Sovereign of that name in France, " was not pleafed when he found his fervants " reading the lives of Emperors and of great " men. Having discovered one of his servants, " by name Neufy, very fond of reading Taci-" tus, and fearing left his courage should take " too high a flight, he advised him to quit that " kind of reading, and peruse only the lives of " persons in a situation similar to his own."

At four years of age D'Aubigné's father put him into the hands of a Preceptor, who taught him the Greek, Latin and Hebrew languages at the same time; and he says, that at seven years of age he translated the Crito of Plato, upon a promise which his father had made him, that the translation should be printed, with a portrait portrait of himself at that very early age prefixed to it.

D'Aubigné, who was a Protestant, attached himself to Henry the Fourth, to whom he was a faithful and active servant, and often exposed his life in his service. Henry repaid his attachment in no other manner than by making him a present of his portrait, D'Aubigné wrote the following lines under it:

Ce Prince est d'etrange Nature, Je ne sçai qui Diable l'a fait. Il récompense en peinture Ceux qui le servent en effet.

Henry had a favourite Spaniel, which D'Aubigné, finding half starved in the streets, took home with him and kept, inscribing these lines upon his collar:

I.

Le fidele Citron qui couchoit autrefois Sur votre let facré, couche ores sur la dure; C'est ce fidele Chien qui apprit de la Nature A faire des Amis, et des traitres le choix.

II.

C'est lui qui les Brigands esfrayant de sa voix, Des dents, des assassins, d'où vient donc qu'il endure La faim, le froid, les coups, les dedans, et l'injure, Payement coutumier du service des Rois.

III.

Sa fierté, sa beauté, sa jeunesse agréable Le sit chérir de vous; mais il sút redoutable A vos haincux, aux siens pour la dexterité.

IV.

Courtisans, qui jettez vos dedaigneuses vues Sur ce Chien delaissé, mort de faim par les rues, Attendez ce loyer de la sidelité.

The Dog was foon afterwards taken to the King, who changed colour when he read these lines, and remained confused for some time. But not long afterwards he was more abashed, when in an Assembly of the Deputies of the Protestants of Languedoc he was asked what was become of D'Aubigné, who had saved their Province; and what he had done for so active and so useful a servant of God. He replied, "that he always looked upon him as much attached to him, and that he would take care of him."

Before D'Aubigné returned to the Court of Henry, he fent one of his Pages to announce to the Sovereign that he was on the road. The King asked him from whence he came? The Page said, "Yes, yes;" and to every question that was put to him returned, "Yes, yes." On the King's asking him, why he continued to answer his questions in that manner, he replied, "Sire, I said yes, yes, because Kings" drive away all persons from their presence, who will not make use of those words to every thing which their Sovereigns require of them."

Henry had quarrelled with D'Aubigné on some occasion or other, and being oftenwards reconciled to him, embraced him very heartily. D'Aubigné told him, "Sire, when I look in " your face, I fee that I may take my old free. " doms and liberties with you. Open now " three of your waiftcoat buttons, and be fo " kind as to tell me how I have displeased you." Henry growing pale at these words (as was his custom when any thing affected him) answered, "You were too much attached to the Duc de " le Tremouille, to whom you know I had an " aversion."—" Sire," replied D'Aubigné, " I " have had the honour of being brought up at " the feet of your Majesty, and I have learned " from you never to abandon those persons who " were afflicted and oppressed by a power su-" perior to their own. You will then furely " approve in me that leffon of virtue which " I learned under yourfelf." This answer was fucceeded by another hearty embrace from Henry.

One night as D'Aubigné was lying in Henry's chamber with some of the Gentlemen of his suite, he said to La Force, who was asleep by his side, "Our Master is surely one of the "most ungrateful men upon earth!" La Force, between sleeping and waking, asked him what he was saying. "Why," exclaimed the King, whom D'Aubig. thought to be asleep, "are "you deas? do you not hear what he says? "that I am the most ungrateful of mankind?" "—Sleep on, Sire," replied D'Aubigné; "I have a good deal more to say yet."—"The next day," adds D'Aubigné, "the King did not look unkindly at me, but he still gave me "nothing."

After Henry's death, D'Aubigné, retaining in his hands two towns near Rochelle, was told, that if he would give them up to the Queen, he should have of her Majesty what he pleased. He replied, "I shall receive of the Queen all "I desire, for I only wish her to look upon "me as a good Christian and a good French man."

He wrote a Universal History, some Tragedies, and other Works, of which he says, "that in his retirement at St. Jean d'Angeli, he printed them at his own expence; and that they

- "they had fcarcely appeared in the world, when
- "they were burnt at Paris by the hands of the
- " Hangman."

D'Aubigné likewise wrote, "Les Aventures " du Baron de Fænesse," in ridicule of the Catholics and the Leaguers. He mentions these lines, which were made upon some Resormers of the Abuses in Church and State:

Enfin chacun deteste

Les guerres, et proisse

Ne vouloir que le bien.

Chacun au bien aspire,

Chacun ce bien destre,

Et le destre sien.

Each party civil war detefts,
And each with folemn vows protefts
He nothing means but good.
Each fays it is his only aim,
Each to this good puts in his claim,
His own full underflood.

THEODORIC DE SCHOMBERG.

THE day before the battle of Ivry, the German troops which Schomberg commanded mutinied and refused to fight, if they were not paid the money which was due to them. Schomberg went to Henry the Fourth with this meffage, who answered him angrily, "How, Colo-"nel Thische (a nick-name given to him), is "it the behaviour of a man of honour to de-"mand money, when he should take his orders "for fighting?"

The next morning, Henry, recollecting what he had faid to Schomberg, went into his tent before the engagement began, and faid to him, "Colonel, this is perhaps the only opportunity "I may have—I may be killed in the engage-" ment—it is not right that I should carry away "with me the honour of a brave Gentleman "like you. I declare then, that I recognize "you as a man of worth, and incapable of doing any thing cowardly."

Schomberg, struck with admiration and gratitude at this noble behaviour of Henry, replied to him, "Ah! Sire, in restoring to me that honour which you took away from me, you take away my life: for I should be unworthy of it, if I did not devote it to your service. If I had a thousand lives, I would lay them all at your seet."

M. DE SILLERY.

As this Knight of Malta, who was Ambassador from France to the Pope, was one day walking with the Venetian Ambassador in the Square before the beautiful Church of the Gefu at Rome (where it feems there is always air, even in the hottest day of summer), he said to him, "What an odd thing it is that there should be " always fomething of a breeze here! your Excellency account for it?"-" Perfectly "well," replied the Venetian, "upon a tradi-"tion that has been long current in this city. " The Devil and the Wind were one day walk-" ing together in the streets of Rome, when, " coming to the Jesuits College in this place, " the Devil faid to the Wind, Pray be so good " as to stay here a minute or two, I have a " word to fay to these good Fathers within. The Devil, as the story goes, never returned to his companion, who has been ever fince " waiting for him at the door."

Memoires DE L'ABBE D'ARNAULD.

After the affaffination of Henry the Fourth, Mary de Medicis burst into the room where Sillery was sitting, and exclaimed, "The" King, Sir, is dead!"—" I beg your Majesty's vol. iv. " pardon,"

" pardon," replied Sillery, who was then Chancellor, "the King of France never dies"

He was banished to his seat at Sillery, and supported the loss of his power and consequence with great impatience. His Physicians, on his death-bed, refusing to acquaint him with the danger of his situation, an old and faithful servant took the painful task upon himself, and faid to him, "Sir, your trial is over: you must "prepare yourself for death. You have not above seven or eight hours to live."—"Is it so, "my friend?" replied M. de Sillery; "let me employ, then, the short time that I have to live in a proper manner. Send for my Confession."

"M. de Sillery's virtues and faults were fo well counterbalanced," fays Sully, "that it was no difficult matter for me to employ the first usefully, and to guard myself against the dangers of the latter."

CRILLON.

HENRY the Fourth, on seeing Crillon come one day into the Drawing-room of the Palace of Fontainbleau, exclaimed, "Here comes the "braves!

"bravest man in my dominions!"—"Sire," replied Crillon, "your Majesty tells an untruth; "he is yourself."

Crillon being defired by his Sovereign Henry the Third to affift in the affaffination of the Duke of Guise, refused in as gentle a manner as he could; adding, "I will attack him, Sire, "fairly in single combat, with all my heart; "I will run in upon him; he will, of course, "kill me, and I shall kill him. A man that is "careless of his own life has, you know, that of "his enemy always in his power."

Crillon was not present at the battle of Arques, where his beloved Sovereign Henry the Fourth gained a complete victory, and afterward wrote to him this laconic epistle: "Hang yourself "immediately, brave Crillon! We have had "an engagement at Arques, and you were not there. Adieu! Je vous aime à tort et à "travers."

The fecond Duke of Guise, when he was very young, endeavoured to alarm the courage of Crillon by pretending that the town in which he was asseep was besieged by the enemy. Crillon, awaked from his sleep by the noise, rushed out with his usual intrepidity, and finding it to be a trick, said to the Duke, "Young man, "I would advise you never again to think of founding the courage of a man of honour. "By death itself, if you had found me fail, I should have struck my dagger into your heart."

Courtefy, no less than courage, was always the appanage of the family of Crillon. That in these respects the last of that illustrious House did not degenerate, the conquest of Minorca, and the following letter sent by him to LORD HEATHFIELD, the preserver of Gibraltar, on his being made a Peer, are convincing proofs:

- " Permettez-moi, mon aimable et respectable enemi, de ne songer qu'au titre d'Ami que vous ayez bien voulu m'accorder, pour rejouïr avec vous de la grace que le Roi votre maître vient de vous accorder.
- "C'est par Monsieur Fowler Walker, un vos Compatriotes et Admirateurs, que je l'ai appris. La qualité de Mylord n'ajoute rien à toutes celles qui vous rendent cher à mes yeux; mais en me prouvant la justice que votre nation a sçue rendre à vos services, et à votre

a votre personne, elle me devient personelle

- " en me rappellant les temoignages particulieres
- " de bonté et d'estime que 1'ai recu à vos
- 46 cotés, et à ceux de vos braves foldats. Ce
- " moment ne s'effacera jamais de ma memoire,
- " heureux fi en trouvant d'autres occasions de
- " menter d'avantage les suffrages de votre gene-
- " reuse nation, en servant nos deux Maîtres
- « comme Alliés, je pouvois avant mourir vous
- " embrasser et vous repeter de vive voix l'as-
- 4 furance des sentimens d'estime de votre na- " tion, et d'amité que vous m'avez inspiré, et
- " avec lesquels j'ai honneur d'être de votre
- " Excellence.

" Monfieur.

"Très humble et très obeissant Serviteur.

" R. R. Duc DE CRILLON.

" Duc de Mahon,

- " A Plombieres,
- " le 9 Juillet, 1788.
- 4 A fon Excellence MYLORD HEATHFIELD.
  - " Capitaine General des Armées
    - " de sa Majesté Britannique."

SEIGNEUR DE BEAUMANOIR.

This French Nobleman, a partizan of the Count du Blois, went one day to confer with Richard Bembron, the English Commandant of Ploermel, a small fortress in Bretagne, for the Countess of that Province, on the means of preventing the mutual outrages their respective foldiers committed upon the peafants. Soon, however, the rivality between the two nations burst forth, and interrupted the conference; each Commander spoke with contempt of the prowess of his rival's countrymen, and with veneration of the valour of his own. grew warm, and a challenge took place. was agreed, that the two Commanders should meet at a given spot with thirty on each side, and decide the dispute. Beaumanoir and Bembron appeared at the day appointed armed cap-à-pied, and at the head of their respective foldiers. The enthusiasm that inflamed these modern Horatii and Curiatii may easily be imagined. They charged most furiously man against man, but soon the fortune of war began to shew itself. Of the English, only twenty-five in a short time remained. Soon afterwards five are taken prisoners, killed, or incapable of fighting on account of their wounds. manoir changes the plan of battle. Bembron does the fame. They form themselves into a little fquadron. The Commander of the English is thrown down, and slain upon the spot. The Commander of the French, dangerously wound~ wounded, and ready to fink with beat and thirst, defires one of his remaining companions to give him something to drink. He exclaims, "Beau-" manor, drink some of your own blood, and " your thirst will go off. You must persist to " the very last extremity." Beaumanoir, animated by these words, persists, and remains master of the sield.

PIERRE DE CAYET.

This author of the celebrated and very rare Memoirs relative to Henry the Fourth of France which bear his name, was at first a Protestant Minister at the Court of the King of Navarre, and was much pressed by the Count of Soiffons to marry him to one of the Princeffes of the House of Navarre. He refused; as not thinking it honourable to be concerned in giving the fanction of religion to a marriage which he knew to be disagreeable to the Royal Family of Navarre, and to which he was fure they would never give their confent. The Count of Soiffons still insisted-Cayet resisted with great intrepidity. On the Count's threatening to stab him if he persisted in his refusal, he yery spiritedly replied, "Well, then, your High" ness may kill me, if you please; I prefer dying by the hand of a great Prince to dying

" by that of the hangman."

ABBÉ RUÇELLAI.

THE effect of motive upon the human frame was perhaps never better illustrated than in the following account of Abbé Rucellai, in that entertaining Book, written by Dom' Noel d'Argonne, a Carthufian friar of Gallion in Normandy, entitled, Melanges d'Histoire et de la Literature, par Vigueuil de Merveille.—" This " Abbé was the great nephew of the celebrated " Monfignor de la Cafa, fo well known by the " excellence of his Italian writings: he came " from Rome to Paris with Mary de Medicis, " wife of Henry the Fourth, where he lived in " great splendor and profusion. He used to " have served up at his table, during the def-" fert, basons enamelled in gold full of effences, " perfumes, of gloves, fans, and even piftoles " for his company to play with. By there cir-" cumstances one may readily judge what fort " of a person M. Ruçellai was. His delicacy " in every thing was excessive: he drank no-" thing but water, but it was a water that was brought from a great distance, and " which was to be drawn drop by drop (if one " may so express it). The least thing in the " world diftreffed him: the fun, the dew, heat, " cold, the least change in the atmosphere seem-" ed to have an effect upon his conftitution. "The mere apprehension of becoming ill " would make him keep his room and put " himself to bed. It is to him that our phy-" ficians are obliged for the invention of that " disease without a disease, called Vapours, " which makes the employment of those per-66 fons who are idle, and the fortunes of those " who attend them. The poor Abbé groaned " greatly under the weight of these trifles, " daring to undertake nothing where there was " the least trouble or fatigue. At last, however, goaded by ambition, or rather perhaps from " a defire to revenge himself upon some person " who he thought had not used him well, he " undertook to ferve his old mistress, Mary 56 de Medicis, in some state intrigues which " were very complicated, and which required " great activity. At first, the fight of that strouble which had always appeared to him " to be fo dreadful a thing, was very near " making him abandon his undertaking; but " getting the better of his fears, he became fo hardy and so active, that his friends, who " faw "faw him work hard all the day and take no reft at night, who faw him riding post upon the most execrable horses, and not caring what he ate or drank, but contented always with what he found, used in joke to ask him news of the Abbé Ruçellai, pretending not to know what was become of him, or what person had changed situations with him, or into what other body the Abbé's soul had transmigrated."

e was

ST. FRANCOIS DE SALES

is one of the latest of the modern Saints, bur, as a lady well observed of him, a most gentle-man-like Saint, for to the rigid virtues of religion he added the graces of urbanity and politoness. He preferred his own miserable Bishopric of Geneva to that of Paris, which Henry the Fourth offered him. This excellent Prelate was a model of humility, charity, and piety. The Abbé Marsollier has written a very entertaining life of him, in two volumes 12mo.; and the "Esprit de St. Francois de Sales," 8vo. contains the summary of his maxims and doctrine very well compiled.

To some ecclesiastic of his diocese who was brought before him as a person of vicious and irregular life, and who had fallen on his knees before him to beg pardon for the scandal he had given, the Prelate replied, falling also on his knees before him, "I have in my turn, Sir, to "request of you, that you will have some com-"passion upon myself, and upon all those who "are ecclesiastics in my diocese, upon the "Church and upon Religion, whose reputa-"tion and honour you disgrace by your scan-"dalous life, which gives occasion to the ene-"mies of our holy faith to blaspheme it."

This speech, says the author of this anecdote, made such an impression upon the culprit, that he took up a new way of life, and became a model of piety and virtue.

Henry the Fourth used to call St. Francois de Sales, "PEvesque des Evesques—the Bishop of Bishops. He has," said he, "birth, learning, virtue, and piety."

MARQUIS SPINOLA.

"PRAY of what did your brother die?" faid this celebrated General one day to Sir Horace Vere.

Vere. "He died, Sir," replied Vere, "of having nothing to do."—"Alas, Sir," faid Spinola, "that is enough to kill any General of us all."

Montesquieu says, "We in general place "idleness among the beatitudes of Heaven; it should rather, I think, be put among the torments of Hell."

JOSEPH SCALIGER.

This great scholar had much of the insolence which but too often accompanies great learning. In his writings he is very profuse of the epithets of "beaft, blockhead, ignorant fel-" low," &c. to those who differed from him in opinion, and who knew not fo much Greek as himself. His pride was much mortified, when, previous to his going to fettle in Holland, he took leave of his Sovereign Henry the Fourth of France, who merely faid to him, "So, M. "I'Escale, the Dutch have sent for you! They " will, I suppose, give you a very handsome " penfion: I am very glad of it." Then carelessly turning to him, he faid, "Pray, Sir, is it " true, that you have fometimes been three * weeks without blowing your nofe?"

Scaliger, in his three hundred and fifty-fecond Epistle, says, "Even the best scholars among the English speak Latin with so wretched a pronunciation, that I remember being in company with an Englishman of that description, who talked Latin to me for a complete quarter of an hour, and whom I understood no more than if he had talked Arabic." I made my excuses for not answering him, as I did not very well understand English. On this my friend, who introduced him to me, buist out into a loud sit or laughter; so that I could never asterwards fee him withour consusion."

The pronunciation of Latin by Englishmen, setting aside all reasons deduced from the make of the letters, the sounds of the vowels, and the rules for the pronunciation of them that have been laid down by Quintilian and by others, is surely desective, as it differs from the pronunciation of all other Nations, and renders an Englishman out of his own country, and even in Scotland, when he speaks Latin, as unintelligible as if he were speaking the Hottentot language. It would be surely worth while in our schools to teach the Italian pronunciation of

* Quan-fi Turcice loqueretur.

Latin, which we may necessarily suppose to be the most perfect, and which was adopted by Milton himself, when he taught school in London.

LOUIS THE THIRTEENTH,

KING OF FRANCE, CALLED THE JUST.

[1610-1643.]

THE disaftrous fate of Henry the Fourth prevented this Prince from completing that education which the excellent Prince his father would have given him. Of the defect of this he was fo fensible, that hearing some young persons of his own age engaged in a ferious converfation, he ran into his closet, where M. Bordas (who was then his favourite) found him in tears; and on asking the Prince the reason of them, he told him, "I lament my fituation extremely. The " children of private gentlemen are more happy " than those of Sovereigns. They are in-" ftructed in the knowledge of the world and in business. As for Princes, their ignorance is defirable to those about them, as they may 66 then more eafily render themselves masters " of and deceive them. Hence arise the mis-" fortunes

" fortunes of States, and the small degree of " reputation which Sovereigns possess in the world."

On the death of the Mareschal d'Ancre, he shid, "God be thanked for his death! Send me hither the old servants of my father, and the old Members of my Council of State: I will in future be directed by their advice."

This Prince had occasionally fits of strength of mind, but they were not lasting. When the Deputies from the Huguenots of France requested him to confirm the decrees in their favour, which were rather extorted sword in hand than granted freely, and quoted to him the examples of Henry the Third and Henry the Fourth, who savoured them; Louis replied, Henry the Third was asraid of you, and my father loved you: now I neither scar nor love you *."

* When after the siege of Rochelle, the Deputies from the Huguenots in that city came to deliver the keys of it to Louis the Thirteenth, they told him, that they came to throw themselves at his seet. M. de Manille, who was present, said, "You are not come, Gentlemen, to throw yourselves at the King's seet, but you have fallen at "them in despite of yourselves."

When Madame de Bouteville, and some more Ladies of distinction, entreated him to save the life of M. de Bouteville, who was condemned to be beheaded for fighting a duel, he replied, "I "feel his loss as sensibly as any of you, but "my conscience forbids me to grant him a "pardon."

When Lord Leicester waited upon this Prince to know whether he intended to affist the Parliament of England against Charles the First, he replied, "Le Roi mon frere peutêtre assuré, que " je n'aime point les rebelles et les scattieux, et que " je ne les assistera jamais contre leur Prince—" The King my brother may rest assured, that "I am no friend to rebels and seditious people; "and that I will never assist them against their "Sovereign*." Had the Cabinet of the unfortunate Louis XVI. been of this opinion; had they not assisted the British Colonies in America against their Mother-country; had they not suffered the subjects of their own despotic

*Yet fuch is the good faith of politicians, that Louis, or rather his Minister, Caidinal Richelieu, did interfere in the disputes between Charles the First and his Parliament. The French Agents were very busy in Scotland, and a letter of Richelieu's was detected, in which he faid, "Before a year is elapsed, the King of England shall know that I am not a person to be despised."

nation

nation to take those lessons of liberty at a distance which they afterwards came and repeated with such energy at home; France might, perhaps, have escaped her past and her present horrors.

The French have generally affected to diftinguish their Sovereigns by specific names; and it has commonly happened, that they have treated those worse than the rest, whom they had distinguished by the most honourable appellation *. Louis XIII. was called "the Just;" and as he had not any particular virtues, or any talents, except that of being a good shot, some one said, "Il étoit juste à tires de l'arquebuse."

Louis feems to have chosen his Ministers for very different reasons: the one, le Duc de Luynes, for being an excellent bird-catcher; Des Noyers, for singing hymns with him; and Richelieu, whose talents he revered, and whose character

Louis XII. was called by his subjects "Le Juste," and the Father of his People." Him they treated with ridicule, and took off to his face upon the stage; and in our times they have brought to the scaffold a Prince dignissed with the title of "Le Juste;" a title which he eminently deserved, as the whole aim of his life was to comply with the wishes of his people, and to let the general will of the Nation prevail over the individual will of the Sovereign.

he

he detefted, because he could not govern his kingdom without him. Louis was extremely devout, and composed a private office of devotion with this title: " Parvæ Christianæ Pietatis Offi-" cia per Christianum Regem Ludovicum XIII. " ordinata." Dubois, one of his Valets-de-Chambre, published a very curious account of the last illness of this Prince, in which he appears to have been an extremely patient and refigned fufferer. His reflections on feeing the towers of St. Denis (the place of sepulture of the Kings of France) from the windows of the palace of St. Germain, display a magnanimity and a refignation to the last hard law of fate, which those in eminent situations do not often discover.

"Not many hours before my Sovereign died," fays Dubois, "waking suddenly from a long and deep sleep, he called the Prince of Condé to his bed-side. I have been dreaming, my cousin, said he, that your son the Duke d'Enguien had come to an engagement with the enemy; that the battle was very long and obstinate; that the victory hung in suspence for some time; but that after great efforts on both sides we got the better, and remained masters of the field. This," adds Dubois, "was prophetic of the battle "of

- of Rocroy, which was gained by the Duc "d'Enguien, at the fame time that the King
- " mentioned his dream to the Prince of
- " Condé."

Louis, like his fon, and all other Sovereions who, during their lives, have wasted the treasure. thed the blood, and destroyed the happiness of their subjects by unnecessary wars, felt upon his death-bed great remorfe for those in which he had been engaged. "He faid one day, in a " loud tone of voice," favs Dubois, " Que h " c'étoit la volonté de Dieu qu'il revint au monde, il " lui plût lui faire la grace de donner la paix à toute " l'Europe: That if it was the will of God that " he should be restored to life, he hoped that " it would please him to permit him to give " peace to all Europe."

- " Memoire fidele des Choses qui sont passées à la
  - " Mort de Louis XIII. Roi du France,
  - " par Dubois, l'un des Valets de Chambre
  - " de sa Majesté, le 14 Mai 1643."

MARY DE MEDICIS, MOTHER OF LOUIS XIII.

WHEN this Princess made her escape from the Castle of Blois to join the Duke of Epernon at Angoulesme, she let herself down from the window of the castle by the sheets of her bed. She intended to have taken with her a valuable casket filled with jewels, but on reaching the ground, she discovered that in the agitation of her mind she had forgotten them. It was now too late to think of recovering them, and she proceeded on her journey on horseback.

Among the archives of the Parliament of Paris, is a fingular petition of this Queen:

" Supplie Marie Reine de France & de Na-" varre, difant que depuis le 23 de Fevrier au-" roit été Prisonniers au Chateau de Compeigne, " sans être ni accusée ni soupçonnée."

This Princes should have been treated with more respect by the people of Paris than she met with. She contributed much to embellish that city by architecture and by painting. The Palace of the Luxembourg, and its celebrated Gallery painted by Rubens, owe their existence to her.

Mary was extremely fond of devices. On the birth of her fon she took that of Juno leaning on a peacock, thus interibed:

Viro partuque beata.

When she was examined before one of the Presidents of the Parliament of Paris, respecting some intrigues she had entered into against the Cardinal de Richelieu, she said of him, "that "she believed he was the greatest dissembler that ever existed; that he could seem what ever he pleased; that in one half hour he could look as if he were dying, and that in the next he could assume the appearance of still health and of chearfulness."

The Cardinal, who had been the servant of this Queen, drove her out of the kingdom of France, and she died at Cologne. Chigi, the Pope's Legate in that city, affisted her in her last moments. With great difficulty he prevailed upon her to say that she forgave Richelieu; but when he pressed her to send the Cardinal a bracelet, or a ring, as a token of her perfect reconciliation with him, she exclaimed, "Questo é pur troppo.—This is indeed too much!" and died soon afterward.

&quot; In the month of August 1641," says Lilly,

&quot;I beheld the old Queen-Mother of France,

Mary of Medicis, departing from London,

&quot; in company of Thomas Earl of Arundel. A

&quot; fad spectacle of mortality it was, and pro"duced tears from mine eyes, and many other beholders, to fee an aged, lean, decrepid, poor Queen, ready for her grave, necessitated to depart hence, having no place of residence less her, but where the courtesy of her hard fortune assigned it. She had been the only stately and magnificent woman of Europe, wife to the greatest King that ever lived in France, mother unto one King and unto two Queens."

ANNE OF AUSTRIA, QUEEN TO LOUIS XIII. KING OF FRANCE.

This Princess was continually haraffed by the imperious Cardinal de Richelieu. He occasionally caused her to be examined by some of the Presidents of the Parliament of Paris, respecting the plots that were carrying on in Spain against his Administration. On one of these trying occasions, she said to him, "M. le" Cardinal, Dieu ne paye pas toutes les semanes, "mais ensin il paye—My Lord Cardinal, God does not settle his accounts with mankind every week, but at last he settles them with effect."

This Princess, in spite of the cruel treatment fhe had received from Cardinal Richelieu, was still so conscious of his great talents for governing, that on feeing a picture of him, foon after she became Regent of France, she exclaimed, " If Richelieu had lived to this time, he would " have been more powerful than ever." Madame de Baviere, in her Letters, fays, "Abbé " ---- was detected in an intrigue: Anne of " Auftria however did much worfe; she was " not contented with intriguing with Cardinal "Mazarin, she married him." This she could do, as the Cardinal had not taken priest's or-Mazarin, however, became very foon tired of the Queen, and used her very ill, the usual consequence of such a marriage. Yet when Mazarin founded this Queen respecting the marriage of her fon Louis the Fourteenth with one of his nieces, she nobly replied, "If " the King was capable of degrading himself so " far, I would put myself with my second son at the head of the whole French Nation " against the King and against you."

The following Impromptu of Voiture to this Queen, who, on feeing him walking alone, asked him of what he was thinking, gives some foundation to the report of her taking in very good part the gallantry of the Duke of Buckingham to her:

Je pensois (car nous autres Poetes, Nous pensons extravagement),
Ce que, dans l'humeur où vous étes,
Vous sieriez, si dans ce moment
Vous avisiez en cette place
Venir le Duc de Buckingham;
Et lequel seroit en disgrace,
De lui, ou du Pere * Vincent.

At the Dutchess of Norfolk's seat at Holme, near Hereford, there is a whole-length portrait of the Princess, with this inscription, " Anne Reine de France, grosse de sex mois; fait par "Beaubrun 1638:" and indeed the Queen's pregnancy is pretty visible in the picture.

LA MARECHAL D'ANCRE.

This upstart Minister, by name Concini, and foster-brother to Mary de Medicis, was so infolent, that he used to call the Gentlemen who were in his train, "My Hundred-a-year Scoundrels," Concini governed France so wretchedly and so desposically, that Malherbe said after his death, "Now it has pleased Hear

The Queen's Confessor.

" ven to take Concini away from us, we have no prayer left to make."

Howell, in his Letters, relates this account of the death of the Marshal d' Ancre from an eye-witness: "The young King Louis XIII. " being told that the Marshal d'Ancre was " the ground of the discontent amongst the " people of Paris, commanded M. de Vitry. " Captain of the Guards, to arrest him, and " in case of resistance to kill him. This bu-" finess was carried very closely till the next " morning, that the faid Marquis was coming " to the Louvre, with a ruffling train of gal-" lants after him, and passing over the draw-" bridge at the Court-gate, Vitry stood there " with the King's guard about him, and, as " the Marquis entered, he told him that he " had a commission from the King to ap-" prehend him, and therefore he demanded " his fword. The Marquis hereupon put his " hand upon his fword; fome thought to yield " it up, others to make opposition. In the " mean time, Vitry discharged a pistol at him. " and fo dispatched him. The King, being 46 above in his gallery, asked what noise that " was below. One fmilingly answered, No-" thing, Sir, but that the Marshal d'Ancre is flain. Who flew him? The Captain of " your

" your Guards. Why? Because he would " have drawn his fword at your Majesty's royal " commission. The King then replied, Vitry " has done well; and I will maintain the act. " Prefently the Queen-Mother had all her " guards taken from her, except fix men and " fixteen women, and fo she was banished "Paris, and commanded to retire to Blois. "Ancre's body was buried that night in a " church-yard by the Court; but the next " morning the lacqueys and pages (who are " more unhappy here than the apprentices of " London) broke up his grave, tore the coffin " to pieces, ripped the winding-sheet, and tied " his body to an ass's tail, and so dragged him " up and down the gutters of Paus (which are " none of the sweetest); they then sliced off " his ears, and nailed them upon the gates of " the city: they cut off his genitories, and fent " them as a present to the Duke of Maine. "The rest of his body they carried to the " new bridge, and hung him, his heels upwards " and his head downwards, upon a new gibbet, " that had been set up a little before to punish " them who should speak ill of the present " Government, and it was his chance to have " the first fruits of it himself. His wife was " hereupon apprehended, imprisoned, and be-* headed for a witch, fome few days after, " upon

" upon a furmise that she had enchanted the "Queen to dote so upon her husband: and "they say, the young King's picture was found in her closet, in virgin wax, with one leg melted away. A little after, a process was formed against the Marquis her husband, and fo he was condemned after death. This was a right act of a French popular sury, which, "like an angry torrent, is irresistible, nor can any banks, boundaries, or dykes, stop the impetuous rage of it."

LE CHEVALIER DE GUISE.

THIS Nobleman, true to his race, from earliest life exhibited the characteristic of family courage. In a Letter in Sir Ralph Winwode's Collection of State Papers, dated Paris, 30th Dec. 1612, it is said:

"The Duke (then Chevalier de Guise, his brother being alive) meeting some days since with the Baron de Luz in the street, challenged him to come out of his coach to sight him, and killed him on the place. The ground of which quarrel is pretended to have been, for that the said Baron did of late let sall some words that he was of coun-

172 LE CHEVALIER DE GUISE.

"cil to the killing of the late Duke of Guise tat Blois, and that he had hindered the Mar shal of Brisac from discovering that pur pose."

In another Letter in the fame Collection, dated Paris, January 26, 1612, it is added,

" A duel has happened between the Cheva-" lier de Guise and the young Baron de Luz; who, to revenge his father's death, hath caft " himself into the same misfortune. He hath been much more pitied than his father, both " for the ground of his quarrel, and for his " own worth, he being one of the best horse-" men in this Court, and of a very good cou-" rage, as he hath shewed in this private fight, which was very long and very well maintained on both fides, for he had three mortal wounds, " and the Chevalier five, but all very favour-" able, fo that he is almost already recovered of them, and his fecond also, a Knight of "Malta, called M. de Grignan, who had a dangerous thrust through the body. The " Baron's fecond, called Riolet, had only a cut " in his hand. Of all these champions, the " Chevalier hath carried away the chief honour; not so much for the respect of his quality, " which which he hath neglected in this action, as " for his readiness in the acceptance of the " combat, and for his valour in the perform-" ance thereof with fo favourable a fuccess; for as foon as he had received the challenge, " which was early in the morning, he did not " take the leifure to read it, but put the fame " in his pocket, and made himfelf prefently " ready; offering to Riolet, who brought him " the challenge, to go fingle along with him " to meet the Baron, who was already out " of the gates; but feeing he was defirous to " have a fecond, he fent fecretly upon another " pretence for the faid Knight of Malta; and " fo having taken each of them a lakey and a " good horse out of the Duke of Guise his " stable, they went forth and met the said " Baron de Luz with his fecond, with whom * they agreed to fight in their shirts on horse-" back; which as foon as the Duke of Guife " understood, he caused the gates of his house " to be shut, lest that any of his servants or " friends should go to his brother's affistance; " which action of theirs hath gotten them " a great reputation here. And so far was 4 the Queen from shewing herself offended 45 with it when she understood the manner " thereof, as that both the King and she sent " presently 6

174 HENRI DUC DE MONTMORENCI.

" presently to visit the Chevalier de Guise, and all the great ones of this Court have also visited him."

HENRI DUC DE MONTMORENCI.

WHEN Henry the Fourth held this illustrious and unfortunate Prince in his arms as his godfather at the christening, he said, "What a fine infant is this son of mine! If "the House of Bourbon should fail, there is "no Family in Europe that has such claims as his to the Crown of France, of which "it has always supported and increased the splendor, at the expence of its own blood."

As this illustrious Nobleman was one day playing at hazard, he won a considerable sum of money. A gentleman standing near him said to his friend, "That now is a sum which would "make a Gentleman's fortune."—"Would it "fo, Sir?" replied the Duke; "take it then, I "only wish that it were more."

As the Duke was walking one day in the fields near Thoulouse with another Nobleman, their discourse turned upon the happiness of men in different situations, and whether those were most to be envied who were in eminent. or those who were in low situations of life. " Ho!" fays the Duke, on observing three or four pealants, who were making their frugal meal under a tree, "these men shall settle the " point for us." He comes up to them, and accosting them in his usual gracious manner fays, "My friends, are you happy? Pray tell " me." Three of them told him, " that " confining their happiness to a few acres " which they had received from their ancestors. "they defired nothing farther." The fourth faid, "that all that he wished was to be able " to regain the possession of a part of his pa-" trimony, which had paffed into other hands "by the misfortunes of some of his family." "Well then, my friend, if you had it again, " vou think that you should be happy?"-" As happy, my Lord Duke, I think, as a man " can possibly be in this world," "What would " it cost you to recover it?" " Two thousand " livres, Sir."-" Well, then," faid the Duke, turning to one of his attendants, " present him " with the money, that I may fay I have had " the satisfaction to-day of making one person " happy."

When Louis XIII. prefented him with the Marshal's staff of France, he said, "Take it,

176 HENRI DUC DE MONTMORENCI.

"my cousin; you will do it more honour than it will do to you." The same Sovereign seeing him as he was setting out for the expedition against Piedmont, exclaimed, "Voila le plus brave homme de mon Royaume."

After the battle of Veillano, where the Duke behaved with the greatest valour, M. de Cramail asked him, if amidst so many dangers he had at all thought of death. "I have learned, Sir," replied the Duke, "from my ancestors, that the most glorious life is that which finishes on a victorious field of battle."

When he was taken prisoner at the battle of Castelnaudari, and was condemned to death by the Parliament of Toulouse, as bearing arms against his Sovereign, he said to the two Judges who came to his prison to signify to him the sentence which the Parliament had pronounced against him, "Gentlemen, I thank you and your "illustrious Court. Assure them that I look upon this sentence no less as proceeding from the mercy of Heaven, than from the justice of my Prince."

St. Preuil, who headed the troop which took the Duke prisoner after the battle of Castelnaudari, dari, fell at the feet of his Sovereign, to request the life of his illustrious captive. Richelieu, who was present while he was thus forcibly imploring the clemency of Louis, cried out, "St. " Preuil, if his Majesty were to treat you as " you deserve, he would lay your head at your " heels*."

Montmorenci, when brought to his trial at Thoulouse, was, contrary to the custom obferved with state-prisoners in France, placed upon a ftool on a level with the Court. When the Judges delivered their opinions respecting the fentence that was to take place upon this diffinguished culprit, the first to whom the Prefident applied, gave his opinion for death, the dreadful but well-deferved punishment of him who appears in arms against his Sovereign. The rest, one by one, rose from their feats, uncovered their heads, but faid nothing; too plainly shewing, by their mournful filence, the cruel necessity they were under to dispense the rigid fentence of the law, however at variance with their wishes and their affections.

The

→ The Cardinal never forgave St. Preuil for telling his friends, "that if he had known that the Duke was to have "perished on a scassfold, he would have blown his brains "out when he took him prisoner."

123 HENRI DUC DE MONTMORENCI.

The Chancellor Seguer, Richelieu's meanest minion, and who had been brought up by the father of the Duke, presided at this tribunal (as it is faid) at his own particular desire. On his asking the Duke in the usual forms of French criminal procedure, "What was his name?" the Duke replied, "I am sure, Sir, you ought to know it, who have so long eaten the bread of our House."

The Duke appeared much affected when he was asked whether he had any children; with respect to every thing else, he made his answers as thort as possible. He not only admitted the facts of which he was accused, but confessed feveral charges that were not brought against him, in hopes to fave the lives of those who had followed him in his fatal expedition. When he was asked, whether the Duke of Orleans, his Sovereign's brother, had not prevailed upon him to take up arms agenft their mutual Sovereign; he replied, "that he did not pretend to " lay any blame upon him, but that it was " his accuried deftiny which had precipitated " him into fo great a crime;" yet he always protested, in the most toleran manner, that he had not the least intention to affect the government of the country.

HENRI DUC DE MONTMORENCI. 179

The Duke, foon after he had undergone his interrogatory, begged to be permitted to retire for a moment, when, addressing the tribunal with a most respectful bow, he said, "Gen-"tlemen, I had nearly forgotten to tell you, that when M. Guillemot was confronted with me, I accused him of having counterseited my seal. I was then greatly agitated. I now completely discharge him from the accusation which I made against him in that situation. He is an honest man. I signed with my own hand the agreement with the "States of Languedoc."

Soon after the condemnation of the Duke, the King fent for his Marshal's Staff and his Collar of the Order of the Holy Ghost. These distinguished marks of the Sovereign's favour, and of the Duke's merit, were brought to Louis as he was playing at Chess. The Duke de Liancourt, and all the persons of rank who were in the room with Louis, men and women, burst into tears. "Sire," faid M. de Charlus, who was fent to the Duke by the King, "be-"hold the Collar of the Order and the Mar-"shal's Staff, which I present you on the part of the unfortunate Duc de Montmorenci. "He has given me in charge, Sire, to assure your Majesty, that he dies under the deepest

" impression of forcow for having offended you; " and that fo far from complaining of the " fentence by which he is condemned to die, " he thinks it bears no proportion to the enor-" mity of the crime of which he has been " guilty." Having faid this, M. de Charlus fell at the knees of the King, and taking hold of them with both his hands, and burfting into tears, faid, "Ah Sire, ah Sire, pardon M. de " Montmorenci | his ancestors have been such " good fervants to your predeceffors! Pardon " him, Sire! pardon him!" At this instant, every person that was in the room (and it happened to be extremely crowded) men and women, as if impressed with one instantaneous impulse, fell upon their knees, crying, "Sire, " for God's sake, pardon M. de Montmo-" renci!" Louis, at this dreadful and affecting scene, appeared totally unmoved. "No," said he, raising his voice, " M. de Montmorenci " must not be pardoned. There cannot pos-" fibly be any pardon for him. You ought " not to be forry to see a person die, who has " fo well deserved to die as M. de Monimo-" renci. The only favour that I can grant " him, is, that the executioner shall not tie " his hands, and that he shall only behead " him." When this was told to the Duke, his Surgeon (M. de Lucante), who came to § him henri duc de Montmorenci. 182 him to cut off his hair to prepare him tor his execution, fell into a fwoon by the fide of his Mafter. "Ah! poor Lucante," faid the Duke; "you, who while I was in prison so firmly "exhorted me to receive all my sufferings as "coming from the hands of Him who made "me—you, I see, are more afflicted than my-"fels! Comfort yourself; let me embrace you, "and take my last faiewell of you." Then turning to his Confessor, he said, "I am ready to go to the scaffold."

The fcaffold was erected in an inner court of the Town-house of Thoulouse, in which the Duke was confined. In passing to it, he obferved the statue of Henry the Fourth, which stood in the middle of the area; the statue of a Monarch who had been in some measure indebted to the Duke's father for the Crown of France. He stopped some minutes, and looked at it very attentively, reflecting, perhaps, on the ingratitude and cruelty of the King his fon. His Confessor, who was beside him, asked him what was the matter, and whether he wanted ary thing. "No, no, my good Father," replied the illustrious Criminal, "I was merely " looking at the flatue of Henry the Fourth. " He was a great and a noble-minded Prince " I had the honour to be his godfon. Let us 182 HENRI DUC DE MONTMORENCI.

"go on." Then pointing to the scaffold, he added, "That is my only road to Heaven."

As focn as he came upon the scaffold, he faluted the Commanding Officer, and all the persons present, more particularly the Town-Guards, who had orders to attend this melancholy ceremony in the drefs they wore on folemn occasions. He entreated them all to bear their testimony to his Sovereign, that he died his most obedient subject, and penetrated with the deepest contrition at having offended him, He then placed himself upon the block, and having committed his foul into the hands of the Author of his being, received the fatal blow. The blood flew out upon the walls of the area; and such is still the veneration of the people of Thoulouse for the memory of M. de Montmorenci, that a few years ago they affected, with tears in their eyes, to shew the marks of it upon the walls of the Court *.

* The Surgeons having opened the body to embalm it, found five maiquet balls within it. They remarked, that of the teventeen wounds which he had received at the bat.'s of Castelnaudari, not one was mortal. Soon after the Duke was taken prisoner, his Surgeon off-red to dress them. "Oh! no, my good friend," said he, "It is by "no means necessary; one more will soon cure them "all."

It appears by the Memoirs of M. Purtegur, that this illustrious culprit was decapitated by the Douloir, an inftrument of death much refembling the modern Guillotine.

Thus, by the hands of the executioner, and as a public spectacle on a scaffold, perished Henri Duc de Montmorenci, a Nobleman highly diffinguished for the splendid virtues of munificence and of courage, of no incompetent paris and understanding, a Peer and Marihal of France, Knight of the venerable Order of the Holy Ghoft, and the first Christian Baron of Europe ; qualities and titles which would have pleaded very forongly in fayour of the life of him who poffessed them, had he not diminished their power, and destroyed their influence, by committing treason against the executive government of his country; the greatest crime which a subject can commit, in itself but too apt to contain all other crimes, and in its own pernicious germ to inclose the feeds of rapine, devastation, and

* In a conversation with the late excellent Dr. Johnson on the subject of this Nobleman, he said, " Had I been

&quot; Richelieu, I could not have found in my heart to have

&quot; fuffered the first Christian Baron to die by the hands of the Executioner."

184 HENRI DUC DE MONTMORENCI.

murder; the diffolution of all order, and the destruction of civil society *.

Pere Arnaux, the Consessor who attended the Duke to the scassor, came to Louis immediately after the execution, to tell his Majesty in what manner his illustrious penitent had behaved in that aweful moment. "Your Majesty," added he, "has given a very striking example to the "world, by the death of M. de Montmorenci; "but God, by his great mercy, has made him a Saint in Heaven."—"Alas! my Father," replied the Monarch, "I should have been happy to have contributed to his salvation by gentler methods."

To the Prince of Condé, a relation of M. de Montmorenci, this Prince said, "How unhap-" py we Kings are, to hear accounts of things that are made up partially on purpose for us: to have no confidence in our nearest re-" latives, in our principal officers, and in those of whom we are fondest; and to be obliged to regulate our conduct by those phantoms

&quot; Le plus grand de maux est la guerre civile. La paix est le server aix bien. La guerre civile étant un des plus grands maux qu'on puisse commettre contre la charité du prochain, on ne peut pas assex exaggerer la grandeur de cette faute."—
6 Persées de Pascal."

" of politics that are but too often the inte" refts of other persons affectedly made our
" own."

Richelieu, in his "Political Testament," says,
La mort de Marillac et de Montmorenci ont mis dans un instant tous les grands dans leur devoir,"

The gentler Olivarez, Prime Minister of Spain, said to the French Ambassador, on the execution of the Duke, "What! has Cardinal de Richelieu dared to put to death the greatest and most powerful Nobleman of France? Has he forgotten that he is himself a subject; that Kings die; and that the execution which executions like this procure is eternal?"

Could an act of rebellion against the Sovereign be ever pardoned in a powerful nobleman, what claims to mercy had this illustrious Frenchman! His character seems to have been composed of the virtues which should distinguish high rank, courage and liberality. When, after the satal battle of Castelnaudari, he was brought wounded in many places to be examined before the Parliament of Thoulouse, the Officer who had taken him prisoner was asked by him, how he could identify his perfon. "Alas, my Lord," replied he with tears in his eyes, "the flames and the smoke with "which you were covered prevented me at first from distinguishing you; but when I saw in the heat of the engagement a person who, after having broken six of our ranks, was still killing some of our foldiers in the seventh,

136 HENRI DUC DE MONTMORENCI.

I thought that he could be no one except
M. de Montmorenci. I did not indeed certainly know that he was the person till I saw him lying upon the ground with his horse dead upon him,"

After having beaten the Huguenot army near the Isle of Rhé, he gave up to his soldiers all the plunder of the place which belonged to himself; and when he was told how very great it was, and what a sacrifice he had made, he replied with a noble distain, "I came not here to acquire money, but glory."

On going to his Government in Languedoc, he called upon a young French Prince, to whom he was related by marriage, who was fludying at La Charité, and made him a prefent of a purse of Louis d'ors. On his return, finding that the young Prince had kept it locked up in his bureau, he took it from him and threw it out of the window among the populace, then turning faid to his relation, "You "oblige me to do that for you which you ought to have done for yourfelf. The first duty of a Prince is to be liberal to those who stand "in need of his assistance."

His Sovereign, Louis the Thirteenth, would most readily have granted him his pardon; but the vindictive Richelieu, whose favour he had refused to court, would not permit him. The Duke was so beloved in his province (Languedoc), that for fear of a revolt of the people in his favour, he suffered in the Inner Court of the Town-house of Thoulouse, at the foot of a marble statue of Henry the Fourth. This circumstance occasioned the following lines:

Ante patris stetuam, nati implacabilis irâ

Occubui, indignâ morte manuque cadens.

Illorum ingemuit neuter, mea fata vid ndo:

Ora patris, nati pestora mai mor erant.

The Duke is made to speak:

Doom'd by the fon's refentful rage, Which neither tears nor prayers affuage, Beneath the royal father's feet A vile difgraceful death I meet;

HENRI DUC DE MONTMORENCI, 388

Yet sympathetic with my state, Neither deplores my wretched fate: The Father's face the Son's hard breaft, Alike of marble stand confest.

When the Duchess of Montmorenci was informed of the death of her hufband, fine exclaimed, "What! is this, then, that King who " is called Louis the Just? Oh my God," faid she, bursting into tears, "my Montmo.enci " was the only thing that I loved in this world, " and you have taken him from me, that I " may love you only!" The Duchess retired to the Convent of the Vifitation at Moulins, where she spent the remainder of her days in for ow and in penitonce. She erected a magnificent mausoleum in the chapel of the Convent to her beloved husband, which she visited every day till she died. She lived two years in this manner, when Louis paffing through Moulins fent one of his Gentlemen to enquire after her health. She received him in the room in which she always sat, which was hung with black cloth, and illuminated by tapers, with a crucifix on the table, and a whole-length picture of her deceased husband over the chimney. " Tell his Majesty, Sir," faid she, "I ventreat " you, how aftonished I am that he should " have

HENRI DUC DE MONTMORENCI. 180

" have the least recollection of a widow so wretched, and so unworthy of that honour which he does her, as myself; but I pray you, do not forget to tell him all that you

" fee here."

Richelieu himself imitated his Sovereign, and sent a Gentleman on his part to this disconsolate Princess, as if to mock her, who looked upon him as the only cause of her missortunes. She replied to his compliments in the same style of dignity and of moderation.

Madame de Montmorenci died at Moulins in 1664, after having in her retirement received the visits of Anne of Austria, Louis the Fourteenth, and of Christina Queen of Sweden.

CARDINAL RICHELIEU.

This great Statesman was intended for the army; but, on his elder brother's giving up the Bushopric of Lucan to become a Carthusian, he was prevailed upon by his family to take orders, to be put in possession of that benefice. He procured the necessary bulls for that purpose of the Pope, then Paul the Fifth, by falsifying his baptismal register, and gaining one year by this artifice, he made up the term requisite by the Canons. The Pope, not finding out the trick put upon him till it was too late, contented himself with faying, "This young man will not stop here, I fancy."

Richelieu performed his exercise for the degree of Doctor of Divinity at the Sorbonne in his episcopal robes, he being then not five-and-twenty years of age, and took for his thesis, "Quis similis mihi,—Who is like to myself?"

He early in life attached himself to Mary de Medicis, and in the disputes between her and her son, Louis the Thirteenth, took her part, for which he was banished to Avignon. There he amused his leisure by writing a "Catechism," and "The Instructions of a Christian," which he afterwards printed at the Louvre Press with great splendor.

On his neturn to Panis with the Queen, he was admitted into the Council, as Secretary of State, against the opinion of his Sovereign, who told his other Ministers that they would repent of their placing him in so eminent a situation. Soon, however, in this situation, his transcendant talents began to display themselves, and he became became Prime Minister, with a plenitude of power and authority which no Minister in France before his time ever possessed.

He brought his brother from his retreat in a Carthusian Convent, and made him a Cardinal, Archbishop of Lyons, and Grand Almoner of France. The brother was dragged unwillingly into public life, and was continually writing to his brother at Paris to persuade him to resign a situation in which he had so little time to attend to his spiritual concerns. These letters the Cardinal never read, after he had been a little used to their contents.

Richelieu, amid all his other triumphs, was very desirous of the distinction which literary fame affords. He offered M. Jay a considerable than of money, if he would permit him to have the credit of his learned Polyglot Bible, and the want of success of a political Comedy which he wrote, called "L'Europe," gave him ferious uneasiness.

Richelieu had the merit of inftituting the celebrated French Academy, and of establishing a standard of the French language. In a seminary which he sounded in his native town of Richelieu, he directed that the French language theoret should be the only one taught at it, and that slip sciences should be communicated to the pupils in that language alone.

So ambitious was the Cardinal to have every thing bend to his will, that he fpoiled the convenience of the magnificent palace which he built at Richelieu, merely to preferve the room entire of the old Château in which he was born.

One trait in the Cardinal's conduct must ever demand our applause. An officious person came to his Eminence to inform him of certain stree expressions which some persons of consequence had made use of, respecting his character and his conduct, in his hearing. "Why how now, "you scoundrel," replied the Cardinal, "have "you the impudence to curse and call me all "these names to my face, under pretence of "their having been said by other particular "persons, who I know entertain the highest "respect for me?" Then ringing his bell, and turning to the page who answered it, he said, "Go, one of you, and turn this troublesome "and malicious sellow down stairs."

Richelieu at one time, in the unprosperous events of public affairs, had caused his plate and and jewels to be packed up, and was preparing to quit the kingdom: he was, however, advised by his friend Cardinal de la Valette to get into his coach, and shew himself openly to the people of Paris. This advice he very wisely took.—He was some time afterward, if possible, in still greater danger. Mary de Medicis, his old protectress, had prevailed upon his Sovereign to dismiss him from his high office, and a new Administration was fornting; he had, however, the good sense and sirmness of mind to demand a private audience of his Majesty, at which he prevailed with that ascendancy which strong minds must ever have over those of a weaker and seebler texture.

Voltaire had supposed the famous "Political" Testament" attributed to this Cardinal to be a sorgery. A copy of it has, however, been discovered since his death in the Library of the King of France, in his own hand-writing.

The Cardinal, according to Segrais, had four hundred thousand livres a-year. He gave one hundred and twenty thousand crowns of it in pensions to men of learning and science, bestowing in that manner the money which his table would have cost him. He was a valetudinarian, and never kept a table.

The Comte de Charost had two brothers, one a General, the other an Archbishop. Richelieu one day complained to him of the conduct of the Archbishop. "Does not your Eminence know," replied the Count, "that where there are many brothers in a family, the greatest blockhead is always put into the Church?"—"Thanks to you, M. de Charost, for your compliment," replied the Cardinal.

Richelieu, whose genius aimed at every thing, gave Desmaretz the plan of the Comedy of "Les Visionaires," which he completed. The Lady represented in it as being in love with Alexander, was Madame de Sablé, who had paid no attention to the Cardinal's addresses. This made the World say, that she was in love only with the Macedonian Hero. Richelieu likewise gave the plan of "Mirame" * to Desmaretz.

In

• &quot;I passed the winter of 1641 at Paris," says Abbe Arnauld, in his very entertaining Memons, "where the "Cardinal celebrated the marriage of his niece with the "Duc d'Enguien, afterwards the great Conde, with great "magnificence. The Comedy of Mirame, of which his "Eminence gave the plan to Desmaretz, was represented on the Cardinal's private theatre, when the Queen was present; and myself as well as many others were much

In the different provisions which were expedited for the several commissions which Richelieu held, it was declared that he was to be obeyed as the King's own proper person.

The Cardinal, while in the agonies of death, was asked by his Confessor if he sincerely pardoned all his enemies. "I never had any but "those of the State," was the answer of the dying Penitent.

Richelieu was resolved, that even his place of sepulture should partake of that magnificence which had distinguished whatever he had done throughout life. He ordered himself to be buried under the Dome of the celebrated College of the Sorbonne, which he had rebuilt with &quot;aftonished that they had the boldness to invite her "Majesty to be a speciator of an intrigue which most affuredly could not please her, and which, from reasons of respect, I shall not explain. But she was obliged to suffer this insult, which it was reported she had brought upon herself by the contempt with which she had treated certain solicitations of the Cardinal. Her Masifety was perhaps a little indemnished by the very small applause the Piece met with, which mortished his Eminence extremely. It was, indeed, the only satisfaction to be had for the insults of a man who was master of every thing, and formidable to every one, whatever indignation might naturally enough be felt against him for such a conduct."—Memorres de l'Abbé Arnauld.

great splendor. A mausoleum was erected over him, at the expence of his niece; it is the chef d'œuvre of that great sculptor M. Girardon. Not long after it was finished, the Princess of Condé, sister to the Duc de Montmorenci, whom Richelieu had caused to be beheaded, came to visit it, and (pointing to the tomb) exclaimed, in the words of the Sister of Lazarus to the Saviour of the World, "Domine standard fuisses hie, frater meus non mortuus esser Lord, "hadst thou been here, our brother had not died."

Richelieu was a great Theologian: his "Me-" thodes des Controverses sur tous les Points de " la Foi," is supposed to be the best book that had appeared on the subject in France, before Arnauld, Nicole, and Boffuet. He feems to have been very anxious that the Huguenots should become Catholics. "The Cardinal," fays Choify, " after having made the Calvinifts " fubmit by force of arms, defigned to attempt " to win them over to the Catholic Faith by " gentle means. For that purpose he intended " to give pensions to their principal Ministers, " that might prevent their being in diftress; " and afterwards to appoint public conferences, " at which nothing should be made use of as " proofs but the authority of the Scriptures " themselves.

"themselves, without admirting tradition. He entrusted his design to Pere du Laurent, who had been a Protestant Minister when he was young. I will neither, said the Cardinal to him, make use of the Doctors of the Sorbonne, who are of use only against the heretics of old times; nor of the Fathers of the Oratory, versed in mystic divinity; nor of the Jesuits, too open and too violent enemies to the Protestants. We must merely quote to them the pure word of God; they will then attend to us, and if they will but attend to what we say, they are our own."

When the Princess of Guimené, a Lady of great beauty, entreated the Cardinal to spare the life of the Duc de Montmorenci, who had been her lover, and to remember what marks of friendship he had given him very lately at Lyons when there was a plot formed against him, Richelieu replied in an angry tone of voice, "Madam, I did not break first with the "Duke."

On the day of the Duke's execution, he found some French lines on his table to this purport:

In this degenerate and ungrateful age, Evils alone the memory engage: On plates of brass we injuries engrave, And kindness trust upon the trackless wave.

Richelieu died completely worn out with fatigue of body and of mind, at the age of fifty-eight. A few hours before he died he fent for M. Chicot, his physician, and defired him as a man of honour to tell him what he really thought of his fituation. "In four-and-"twenty hours," replied he, "your Eminence " will be either dead or cured."-Richelieu knew very well what this meant, and fent immediately for his Confessor, who administered the last Sacraments to him. With his eyes fixed attentively upon the veffel which contained the holy element, he exclaimed, "O my " Judge, condemn me, if, in what I have done, "I have ever had any intentions but those of " ferving the King and the Country "

His Sovereign, on being informed of his death, faid coolly, "Voila un grand politique" most!"

Richclieu was, during the whole of his administration, very subject to sleepless nights. He had always by his bedside one of his pages to read to him when he was indisposed to rest. A young man who had been recommended to him as one of his readers, imagining that the Cardinal was afleep, was looking over fome papers that lay upon his bed. The Cardinal, who had feigned to be afleep merely to try the young man's difcretion and honour, darting fuddenly a look of great sternness upon him, ordered him immediately to leave the room, and never afterward to come into his presence.

One of the Cardinal's maxims was, "That " an unfortunate and an imprudent person " were fynonymous terms." Of his own method of acting, he gave this account to the Marquis de Vieuville. "I never dare under-" take any thing until I have well confidered " it; but when I have once taken my reso-" lution, I go directly to my point. I throw " down every thing that stands in my way; " I cut up every thing by the roots that op-" poses me; and then I cover every thing with " my Cardinal's robe."—Richelieu used to say, "That the favourites of his Sovereign *, and " their intrigues, gave him more trouble than " all Europe taken together." The completest testimony that was ever given to the talents of Richelieu was by Peter the Great, on feeing the statue of the Cardinal at the Sorbonne. "This," said he, "was a man to whom "I should very gladly have given one half of my dominions, if he would have governed the "other half for me."

<sup>* &</sup>quot;Le Cabinet du Roi & son petit Coucher me causent plus d'emban as que l'Europe entiere."

&quot; Vie de Richelieu."

"The Cardinal," fays Abbé Brotier, "knew well the resources of the great country which he governed. He used to say of it, France can raise six hundred thousand soot and one hundred and sifty thousand horse, and be able to go to war with them in a fort- night."

The Cardinal's device was an offrich, with this motto, in allufion to the supposed power that bird has of digesting iron: "Fortes dura "coquit." According to Brotier, he first put this motto on the cannon of his Sovereign Louis the Thirteenth, "Ratio ultima Regum *."

When Richelieu fent the celebrated Abbé de St. Cyran to the Castle of Vincennes, his niece, the Duchess d'Aguillon, and many other perfons, entreated him to give him his liberty. He replied, "If in the last age Luther and "Calvin had been shut up in prison, it would

<sup>* &</sup>quot; Parcles Memorables."

" have faved Europe a great deal of trouble and
" of bloodshed."

A favourite faying of Richelieu was, that "fecrecy is the foul of all great affairs."

The Cardinal had an odd whim of having a Comedy composed by five different persons, each of whom took an Act. It was called "La." Comedie de Tuilleries, par les cinq Auteurs." It was represented before the King and Queen and the Court of France with great magnificence. The Actors sat by themselves on a bench. Chapelain was supposed to have been the planner of it. He, however, only corrected the piece in several places. The Cardinal requested his help in this business; promising in return to give Chapelain his assistance on a similar occasion.

"How happens it," faid the Cardinal one day to M. de Valancey, the discur des bons mots of his time at Paris, "that you, who scatter your "abuse upon every one, have never once taken "it into your head to find fault with me? Is "it because you are assaid?"—"No, Sir," replied M. de Valencey, "it is because your Emi"nonce commits no faults."

A scarce medal is sometimes met with in the cabinets of the curious, representing on one side the head of Louis XIII. with his usual titles; and on the other, the head of his Prime Minister Richelieu, thus inscribed, "Nol sine "Consilio;" alluding, perhaps, to the favourite saying of his Eminence, that an unfortunate and an imprudent person were in general synonymous terms. Juvenal had indeed said long before him, Nullum numen abeft, fi fit prudentia.

Prudence to man each other aid supplies,
And claims him the protection of the skies.

"The Cardinal de Richelieu and M. de Bullion, Surintendant of the Finances," fays M. Bourbon, "making an average between them, are enabled to do every thing they defire. The first hardly ever sleeps at all, and the last is always asleep; and yet every thing succeeds as they wish." May not Claudian's Epigram be applied to them?

Mallius indulget somno noctesque diesque Insomnis Pharius sacra prophana rapit. Omnibus hoc Italæ Gentes exposcite votis Mallius ut vigilet, dormiat ut Pharius.

Bullion through nights and days his fleep extends, His watchful Colleague all our treafure fpends; Then, O ye Gods! in fafety France to keep, Let Bullion wake, and Richelieu ever fleep!

ALPHONSE DE RICHELIEU,

CARDINAL DE LYONS,

was the brother of the great Cardinal of that name, and was prefented by Henry the Fourth to the Bishopric of Luçon, which he gave up to his brother, and became a Carthusian Monk of the Grande Chartieuse near Grenoble, where he refided for near twenty years, and was known in the Convent by the name of "Father Al-" phonse." He was taken from this retreat by his brother (when he became Prime Minister), and made Archbishop of Lyons, Great Almoner of France, and Cardinal. When the plague broke out in his diocese, he distinguished himself by his attention and liberality to his diseased slock, whom he never could be prevailed upon to quit, whilft they were in this state of danger and distress.

On his death-bed he ordered his body to be buried in the Chapel of an Hospital at Lyons, with this inscription: "Pauper natus sum, pau"pertatem vovi, pauper morior, et inter pauperes" sepeliri volo—I was born poor, I made a vow
"of poverty, I die poor, and I am buried
"amongst the poor." He told his Confessor

204 ALPHONSE DE RICHELIEU.

in his last moments, that he had rather have died as Father Alphonse than Cardinal of Lyons.

This Prelate, who, like his brother, was a valetudinarian, was the means of bringing chocolate into vogue as a diet in France. That diet requires no effort of mastication to become nutritive, and, united with some saccharine substance, extremely well supports those (as is particularly the case with persons of a certain age in the West Indies) who have been deprived of their teeth.

MARSHAL MARILLAC

was brought to the scaffold by the sanguinary Richelieu in 1632. Forty years of service, and his memory rehabilitated by the Parliament of Paris after the death of that Minister, have restored his name to that degree of respect and esteem which it ever deserved.

In order to be able to make out any accufation against the Marshal, his enemies were obliged to recur to some trifling abuses in his conduct as Commander in Chief, to some profits he had made by contracts, or that some persons under under him had made on the building of the Citadel of Verdun. On hearing these charges read, he exclaimed to his Judges, "What an extraordinary thing it is, that a man of my rank should be prosecuted with so much sewrity and injustice! After all, there occurs nothing in the charges against me but the words hay, straw, stores, and mortar."

When he was required to give up the staff of Marshal of France, previous to his being led to execution; "The King," said he, "gave it to me, and put the power of it into my hands, "which I have often stained with the blood of his enemies: but now I return it to him in a manner much more bloody."

As he was conducting to the Place de Grêve to be executed, he paffed before the Hotel of Cardinal de Richelieu. "Alas!" faid he, "in that house I was promised many things, which to-day I find not to be true."

MICHAEL MARILLAC

was the elder brother of the Marshal of that name, and was made Keeper of the Seals of France in 1626. They were taken from him in 1630, and he died in confinement in 1632. The two brothers were much attached to Mary de Medicis, and incurred the displeasure of Richelieu for their attachment to that persecuted Princess.

M. de Marillac used to fay to the young Lawyers of his time, "Only take pains, and "be modest, and you must rise in your profession."

He called his high office an office of perpetual denial: "For," faid he "I am in general" obliged to refuse nine requests out of ten "that are made to me."

He often repeated what his predecessor M. de L'Hôpital says in his Poems of a Chancellor that used to refuse nothing, whether the requests were just or unjust: "That it is no "praise to a wise man to have one quality "which

" which he has in common with a young pro" digal, or with a woman who has loft her e virtue."

DUC DE ROHAN.

This great General and excellent Politician first shewed his talents in the latter capacity at the meeting of the Protestants at Saumur in 1611, where he took the part of the great and good Sully, his father-in-law, against the Duc de Bouillon with success. "It was here," said he, "that I laid the foundation of that "knowledge to which the great ought particutarly to apply themselves, that of managing "mankind *."

The Duke had the courage to refift Cardinal Richelieu, that idol of power to whom every other knee in France bowed. In fpite of the diffresses of the Huguenot party in France, of which he was the leader, he adopted the daring resolution to assemble another army of that party, and took care to let the Cardinal

<sup>* &</sup>quot;J'ai jetté là les fondements de la science que les gran l' doivert sur toutes choses apprendre, qui est de gagner les know, that pacification between the Catholics and Huguenots was the great object of his defires; that whatever might happen, he was refolved to perfift, as well as to perish himself with all the remains of his party, rather than not obtain a general peace conformably to the acknowledged edicts for that purpose; and recommended to his Eminence to consider how dangerous it was to preclude a man of courage in arms from every hope of safety.
" homnes."

The pacification was foon afterwards figned by Louis the Thirteenth, at Aletz, June 27, 1629, being the third which the Duke had the honour to conclude with his Sovereign. He then retired to Venice, where he was received with every distinction due to his rank and character, and in which city he wrote the celebrated Memoirs of his Life and Negociations; by which means he filled up that leifure which to a man of his ardent and active mind would have been insupportable without some employment. He was often heard to fay, that there was no misfortune could happen to a man fo great as that of having nothing to do, and that he really wondered how a man of fense could ever find himself in that horrid situation; but which indeed always happened to those, who, having no powers of mind, exist only upon the favours of fortune; and that when her feeble power abandoned them, and they had lost the idle and seductive air of the Court, they became exposed to vexation, and fell into such a state of restlessness as rendered them incapable either of ease or pleasure.

His maxims as a General respecting his countrymen were, that they should always be placed by their Commander in such a manner that they might begin an engagement *. "I know well," said he one day, "the disposition of the French; they are incapable of maintaining foot by foot any advantage they may have gained over their enemies; they should always be kept in a posture of attack, and not of defence. Their quick and impetuous character inclines them rather to act than to suffer, and to advance rather than wait the attack of their enemies."

The celebrated Pere Joseph, the confidant of Richelieu, wrote by his order a letter, as from the Cardinal Infant of Spain to the Duke, by way of founding his inclinations toward that Court. The Duke replied, that he was too good a Frenchman, and too dutiful a subject to his King, to pay the least attention to any thing that was prejudicial to his Prince; and that however ill he was treated at his own Court, he had most affuredly very good reasons for complaint, but none for being deficient in fidelity to his Prince.

<sup>* &</sup>quot;Il faut mettre les François en estat de frapper les "premiers."—Histoire du Duc de Rohan.

The Duke de Rohan was mortally wounded at the battle of Rhinsfield. Previous to the engagement, the Duke of Weymar, one of the most distinguished Generals of his time, defired him to give the word of command; adding, that he should be ashamed to give it himfelf, whilft before the greatest General in Europe. The Duke de Rohan replied, that he was only there to fight as a foldier under his orders, and to fee the difference there was between military operations which depend upon the understanding and mere coups du main; but that if he really wished to have his opinion on the present state of the army, he would very readily give it to him, to the best of his abilities.

The Duke of Weymar confulted him and took his advice, which proved unfortunate only to the Duke de Rohan, as he was wounded and taken prisoner. As they were taking him off the field, the Duke of Weymar, rallying his troops, troops, took the party prisoners who were carrying off the Duke de Rohan, and had the melancholy satisfaction of giving him every assistance in his wretched situation. He died a few days after the engagement, on the thirteenth of April 1638, in the Abbey of Coningssield, where his heart is deposited in a box: his body was carried with much funeral pomp to Geneva, and buried in the great church of that city.

When the Chiefs of his party accused this great man of having sold to Louis the Thirteenth some of their fortresses which they were unable to defend, he said with great indignation, presenting his breast to them at the same time, "Strike! strike! I am willing to die by "your hands, after having so often risqued m" is life for your service."

The Duke, amongst his various other works, wrote a book on the Interest of Princes, with a dedication to the Cardinal de Richelieu; in which he tells him, after mentioning the great dissipation, that no certain and invariable rule can be laid down for it, and that what causes a revolution in the affairs of the world, causes also a compleat alteration in the fundamental maxims of government, "therefore," adds he, "those "persons who conduct themselves more by examples of past times than by reasons taken from the present situation of things, of ne"cessity make many mustakes."

In his chapter on the Interest of England, he says,

"England, which is like a fmall feparate world, had nothing to do with other States, unless when the necessity to protect its commerce obliged it, which was then its true interest. It is by that it has acquired its wealth, which, joined to its situation, has rendered it so considerable. But since, under the shadow of the mysterious marriage between Philip and Mary, the politics of Spain have insensibly entered into those of England, which before that time had maxims of policy of its own, it has, by little and little, sometimes accommodated itself to the interests of France, and sometimes to those of Spain.

"Queen Elizabeth," added he, "who by her prudent government has equalled the fame of the greatest Sovereigns that Christian Europe ever possessed, well acquainted with the situation of her kingdom, thought that the true interest of it was to keep it in a state

- " of perfect union, having deftroyed all the re-
- " mains of the former factions; very wifely
- " judging, that England is a great animal which
- " can never die unless it destroys itself: " Que
- " l'Angleterre est un grand animal qui ne peut
- " jamais mousir s'il ne se tue lui mesme."

CARDINAL DE BERULLE.

This pious man died, as the late excellent Mr. Granger died, while he was celebrating the Sacrament. The Cardinal fell dead upon the steps of the altar, at the moment of Consecration, as he was pronouncing the words "hanc "tgitur oblationem." This occasioned the following distinch:

Cæpta sub extremis nequeo dum sacra sacerdos Per sicere, at saltem vistima persuram.

In vain the reverend Pontiff tries To terminate the facrifice; Himself within the holy walls The Heav'n-devoted victim falls.

Cardinal Berulle came over with Henrietta Maria, Queen of Charles the First, to England, as her Confessor, to the Court of which he endeared himself by the sanctity of his morals, and the extreme propriety of his behaviour. Like the late learned and excellent Dr. Balguy, he possessed the nolo episcopori in the extremest purity of intention, for when his Sovereign Louis the Thirteenth of France pressed him to take the Bishopric of Leon, he refused; and on that Monarch's telling him that he should employ the solicitation of a more powerful advocate than himself (meaning the Pope) to prevail upon him to accept of it, he said, "that "if his Majesty continued to press him, he should be obliged to quit his kingdom."

He established the venerable Order of the Fathers of the Oratory in France, founded by San Philippo Neri, and was a man of such eminent goodness, that Pope Leo the XIth said of him, when he saw him at Rome as a simple siar, "Le Pere Berulle n'est pas un homme, c'est "un arze."

JACQUES CALLOT.

This excellent Engraver was born a subject of the Duke of Lorraine. When Nancy was taken from that Prince by Cardinal Richelieu, he wished Callot to make a set of prints descriptive of the siege of that important place. The Artist refused; and, on the Cardinal's insisting with him very peremptorily, he replied, "My "Lord, if you continue to urge me, I will cut off the thumb of my right hand with my pen-knise before your face. I will never consent to perpetuate the calamity and drigrace of my Sovereign and protector."

Callot wore, attached to his button-hole, one of his small copper-plates, which he thought his chef-d'auvre. Were every distinction of ornament as well applied, who would not envy Sovereigns the power of bestowing them?

This great Artift's mafter-piece is his "Mi" feries of War," miferies which, in the prefent diffracted flate of Europe, do not require to be recalled to our minds by the powers of imitation,

CAMPANELLA.

This celebrated Dominican France Naplesis mentioned by Mr. Burke in his ingenious "Effay on the Sublime and Beautiful." He was accused of treason and of hereig by an aged Friar of his own Order with whom he disputed, and over whom, most probably, he had the advantage in the dispute. He was imprisoned for twenty-seven years, and was put to the rack feven times, for twenty-sour hours each time. By the power of abstraction which his mind possessed, he bore the tortures inslicted upon him with the greatest tranquillity. He was delivered from his confinement at the solicitation of Pope Urban VIII. in 1624, and came to Paris, where he was much confidered by Cardinal Richelieu. Campanella wrote "Athessmus" Triumphatus" and "Monarchia Messa;" books now become extremely scarce, like many others, from their not being worth the reprinting.

AUGUSTE DE THOU.

It is supposed that the immediate cause of the prosecution of this excellent and intrepid man was, that his grandfather had mentioned Cardinal Richelicu's father in his celebrated History of His Own Times, in a manner not much to his credit. His Judges were anxious to save him. "M. le Chancelier a beau dire," says Richelieu, "il faut que M. de Thou meure; "The Chancellor may say what he pleases, "but M. de Thou must die +."

&quot; "He has put my father in his Hustory," faud the vind cuve Richelieu, " and I will put his grandson's name in " mine."

De Thou, whilft he was in prison, had made a vow to endow a chapel whenever he gained his liberty. On the morning of his execution he composed the following inscription for himfelf:—

Christo Liberatori

Votum in carcere pro libertate conceptum,

T. Augustus Thuanus

E carcere vitæ jam jam liberandus

Morte solvit x11 Junii, 1642.

Consitebar tibi Domine, quoniam exaudisti me & factus es mini in salutem.

He died with great courage.

LA COMTESSE DE SAINT BALMONT.

"IT was in the year 1638," fays Abbé Arnauld, in his very arnufing Memoirs, "that "I had the honour to become acquainted with "that Amazon of our times Madame de Saint Balmont, whose life was a prodigy of courage and of virtue, uniting in her person all the valour of a determined soldier, and all the modesty of a truly Christian woman. She was of a very good family of Lorraine, and was born with a disposition worthy of her birth. The beauty of her face corresponded to that of her mind, but her shape by no "means

" means agreed with it, being small and rather " clumfy. Providence, who had deftined her " for a life more laborious than that which " females in general lead, had formed her more " robust and more able to bear bodily fatigue. " It had inspired her with so great a contempt " for beauty, that when she had the small-pox " she was as pleased to be marked with it as " other women are afflicted on a similar occa-" fion, and faid, that it would enable her to " be more like a man. She was married to the " Count de Saint Balmont, who was not infe-" rior to her either in birth or in merit. They " lived together very happily till the troubles " that arose in Lorraine obliged them to sepa-" rate. The Count was constantly employed " by the Duke his Sovereign in a manner fuit-" able to his rank and disposition, except when " he once gave him the command of a poor " feeble fortress, in which he had the affurance " to refift the arms of Louis XIV, for feveral " days together, at the rifque of being treated " with the extremest severity of military law, " which denounces the most infamous and de-" grading punishment against all those Officers " who hold out without any prospect of success. "M. de Saint Balmont went indeed farther, " and added infolence to rashness; for at every " shot of cannon that was fired at the fortress, " he

" he appeared at the windows attended by " fome fiddlers, who played by his fide. This se madness (for one cannot call it by a more " gentle name) had nearly cost him very dear; " for when he was taken prisoner it was agi-" tated in the Council of War, composed of " the Officers whom he had treated with this " infolence, whether he should not be hung up " immediately; but regard was paid to his " birth, and perhaps to his courage, however " indiscreet. Madame de Saint Balmont re-" mained upon his estates to take care of them. " Hitherto she had only exerted her soldier-" like disposition in hunting and shooting " (which is a kind of war), but very foon an " opportunity presented itself of realizing it, " and it was this: An Officer in our cavalry " had taken up his quarters upon one of her " husband's estates, and was living there at dif-" cretion. Madame de Saint Balmont sent " him a very civil letter of complaint on his ill behaviour, which he treated with great " contempt. Piqued at this, she was resolved " that he should give her satisfaction, and " merely confulting her refentment, she wrote " him a note, figned, Le Chevalier de Saint " Balmont. In this note the observed to him, · " that the ungentleman-like manner in which " he had behaved to his fifter-in-law, obliged

" him

"to her courage. I have often, fays the Abbé, been in company with this extraordinary per"fonage at the house of Madame de Feu"quieres, wise to the celebrated Marshal of that name, at Verdun; and it was quite ridiculous to see how embarrassed she appeared in her female dress, and (after she had quitted it in town) with what ease and fpirit she got on horseback, and attended the ladies that were of her party, and whom she had lest in her carriage, in their little excursions into the country.

"The manner of living, however, of Ma-" dame de Saint Balmont, so sar removed from " that of her fex, and which in all other females " who have attempted it, has ever been found " united with libertinism of manners, was in " her accompanied with nothing that bore the " leaft retemplance to it. When the was at " home in time of peace, her whole day was " employed in the offices of religion; in " prayers, in reading the Bible and books of " devotion, in visiting the poor of her parish, " whom the was ever affifting with the most " active zeal of charity. This manner of living procured her the admiration and effeem " of persons of all descriptions in her neigh-" bourhood,

222 LA COMTESSE DE SAINT BALMONT.

- " bourhood, and infured her a degree of re- " spect that could not have been greater to-
- " wards a Queen *."

MADAME DE SEVIGNE.

" THE mere name of this Lady," fays Abbé Arnauld, "deserves an eulogium from those " who know how to appreciate fense, wit, and " virtue. I shall never forget," adds he, " the " first time that I had the honour to see this " excellent Woman in her coach with her for " and daughter. They realized what the " Poets have told us of Latona between Apollo " and young Diana, fo much beauty and ele-" gance appeared in the Mother and her chil-" dren. She then did me the favour to pro-" mise me her friendship, and I am not a little " proud of having preserved to this day a pre-" fent so dear and so precious. But I must say " indeed, to the honour of the Ladics, that I " have ever found them more constant in their " friendships than the Men. By the Men I have often been deceived; - never by the " Ladies *."

* The late excellent Duchess Dowager of Portland had a Print of this extraordinary woman in her Collection.

LEMERIUS,

in the year 1618, quoted the following Latin verses, which, he says, were written by a Protestant Advocate of the Parliament of Paris sifty years before that time; "or rather," adds he, "by an Angel, who dictated them to him:"

Festinat propero cursu jam temporis ordo,
Quo locus et Franci Majestas prisca Senatús,
Papa, Sacerdotes, Missa, Simulachra, Diique
Fistitii, atque omnes superos exosa potestas
Judicio Domini justo sublata peribunt.
In the dark volume of resisties Fate
What changes menace wretched Gallia's State!
In one, one luckless yet approaching hour
The Roman Pontist's ariogated power;
The Mass itself; the Priests, a sacred train,
'Who each time-honour'd rite with zeal maintain;

* The fagacious Dr, Franklin used to say, that the purest and most useful stiend a man could possibly procure, was a Frenchwoman of a certain age who had no designs upon his person; "they are," added he, "so ready to do you service, and from their knowledge of the world know so well how to serve you wisely."

Weak mortals raised to the empyrean throne,
Gods that man's base and wretched fabric own;
Powers that the soul in slavish fetters bind,
Debase the noble nature of mankind,
With their own phantoms scare his gen'rous breast,
And every sway except their own detest;
These, "whilst eternal justice rules this ball,"
These, these, by Heaven's own high behest, shall fall;
In endless ruin and confusion hurl'd,
A dread example to a wond'ring world.

MARSHAL RANTZAU.

WHAT contrarieties often occur in the same person! How often the indulgence of one vice prevents the exertion and the advantage of many good qualities, and of many virtues! Auberi du Maurier, in his "Memoires de Hambourg," thus describes the celebrated Marshal Rantzau-" He was a German of high birth, and a Ge-" neral of fuch great note, that Mazarin used " to oppose him to the Prince of Condé, when " that great Commander had the misfortune " to be in arms against his country and his " Prince." M. Rantzau poffeffed admirable qualities both of body and mind. He was tall, fair, and very handsome. To see him only, one would fay he was born to command. He was the finest horseman ever beheld. He would hit a fingle a fingle piece of money with a piftol at a hundred paces distant. He was invincible with the fmall-fword. He fpoke the principal languages of Europe, and had a general taste for the sciences. He was acquainted with all the great Generals of the age, having made war under them from the moment he was able to bear He faid in conversation many lively things; and as an infallible proof of the force of his eloquence in any council of war in which he ever fat, he always drew over the other Members to be of his fentiments, so ably did he support them with powerful reasons. If he spoke well, he wrote still better. To his courage nothing was impossible. He possessed perfect coolness in the greatest danger, and found expedients under the heaviest misfortunes. His liberality procured him the love and esteem of his soldiers, and no General knew how to give his orders fo But so many excellent and rare virtues were effaced by his great vices. Never was there a more determined debauchee. He loved wine and women to excess, and the most scasoned drinkers were afraid of him. He fought their company from all parts, and no one could equal him in this species of vice. He sometimes remained in a state of infensibility for whole days. The disorder that reigned in his private affairs was inconceivable. He gave away whatever he had about him without discrimination, and he always had much money in his pocket, which he was robbed of during his inebilety. Thus, like a cask without a bottom, all the riches of India would not have been fufficient for him, and he found himself compelled to sell all his effects for little or nothing. He often loft his best friends for a bon-mot. Du Maurier, who was Rantzau's great friend, told this extraordinary man one day, that his excesses and irregularities would destroy his health, and that they would prevent his rifing to the principal employments in the State. "I would not," answered he. darting a most ferocious and haggard look upon Du Maurier, "I would not give up my " pleasures to become Emperor of Germany." His excesses, during the siege of Dunkirk by - the Spaniards, are thought to have loft that place. He was, however, confined for fome time in the caftle of Vincennes for this supposed neglect, and was cleared from any imputation of treachery or of cowardice. He died foon atter his release. During the siege of Gravelines, he had one day appointed the Duke of Orleans, and some of the principal French Nobility, to fup with him. He went, however, in the morning, to pay a visit to the famous Dutch Admiral Van Tromp, where he got fo drunk with Malaga wine, that he fell under the table as if he was dead, and was obliged to be put to bed. His Aid-du-camp made an apology to the Duke of Orleans for his mafter's not being able to attend him at supper, and put it upon an excessive swell of the sea, which had prevented his leaving the Admiral's ship.

" inebriate

To shew the dangers of ebriety, the Catholic Legends tell us of some Hermit to whom the Devil gave his choice of three crimes; two of them of the most atrocious kind, and the other to be drunk. The poor Saint chose the last, as the least of the three; but when drunk, committed the other two.

The baneful effects of this pernicious vice upon the body are described by the ingenious Dr. Darwin, in his "Zoonomia," under an allegory which would not have disgraced the splendid imagination of Lord Bacon humself.

"Prometheus," fays the Doctor, "was painted as stealing fire from Heaven, that might well represent the inflammable spirit produced by fermentation, which may be faid to animate or enliven the man of clay; whence the conquests of Bacchus, as well as the temporary murth and noise of his devotees. But the after-punishment of those who steal this accursed fire, is a vulture gnawing the liver, and well allegorizes the poor

Q 2

" inebriate lingering for years under painful diseases."

And that the graces and energies of poetry may come in aid of the figure fo strongly depicted in prose, the same great Physiologist, in his "Botanic Garden," in the most sublime imagery, and with the greatest strength of perfonisication, has composed a picture which should be painted and hung up in every chamber dedicated to Bacchanalian festivity.

Dr. Darwin personifies the Goddess of Wine under the name of VITIS, who thus addresses her votaries:

"Drink deep, fweet Youths," feductive Vitis cries, The maudlin tear-drop glistening in her eyes; Green leaves and purple clusters crown her head, And the tall thyrsus stays her tott'ring tread: "Drink deep," she carols, as she waves in air The mantling goblet, "and forget your care." O'er the dread feast malignant Chymia scowls, And mingles poison in the nectar'd bowls. Fell Gout peeps grinning thro' the slimsy scene, And bloated Dropsy keeps behind unseen. Wrapp'd in her robe, white Lepra hides her stains, And silent Frenzy, writhing, bites his chains.

MALHERBE.

This great Poet was apt to be a little caustic in conversation. Some one was talking before him of the nobility of his family: "Alas! my good friend," replied he, "it is in the power of one woman to taint the blood of Charle-magne himself." Speaking one day of the wickedness of mankind, he said, "Why, when there were only three or four persons in the world, one of them killed his brother."

Malherbe, though perhaps the first good poet that France ever produced, thought so slightly of the merit of his productions, that he used to say, "a good poet was of no more use to a "State than a good player at quoits." He observed, "that the test of good verses was, "when they were got by heart." Every one remembers his celebrated stanza upon the certainty of death;

La pauvre en sa cabane,
Ou la chaume le couvre,
Est sujet à ses loix.
Et la garde que vielle aux barrieres de Louvre, N'en desend pas nos Ross.

[ 230 ]

GODEAU, BISHOP OF VANCE,

used to say, that to compose, was an Author's Heaven; to correct his Works, an Author's Purgatory; but to correct the Press, an Author's Hell.

PEYRESC.

This learned Frenchman was in England for a few months in 1606. He was presented to King James, who often sent for him to converse with him, and was particularly pleased with the following incident, which Peyresc related to him.

Peyresc was present at a dinner given by some person of consequence in London, who had invited many men of learning and of science to meet him. In the middle of the dinner, one of them, Dr. Torie, drank to Peyresc out of an immense cup, filled with strong wine, and pledged him to drink it after him. Peyresc excused himself, no less on account of the size of the cup, than on account of the liquor it contained; giving as reasons, the weakness of his stomach, and and his not being at all used to drink wine. The excuse, however, was not allowed, and he confented to drink after Dr. Torie, provided he might afterwards be permitted to challenge him in any liquor that he pleased. To this the company as well as the Doctor confented. Peyresc then immediately taking the bowl in his hand, drank it off boldly, all at once, and filling it again with water, he drank to Dr. Torie. The Doctor, little used to such potions, beheld him with aftonishment and affright; yet, as he was not allowed to recede from his agreement, he puffed and blowed, put the cup often to his mouth, and as often took it away again, pouring out at the intervals fo many verses from the Greek and Roman Poets, that the day was near expended before he could get all the water down his throat, fo little was he accustomed to so frigid a beverage.

Gaffendi, who wrote the Life of Peyresc in very elegant Latin, mentions this story. Gasfendi's Life was translated into English by Dr. Rand, who dedicated it to Mr. Evelyn, the Author of "Sylva," whom, from the general extent of his knowledge, and his love of learning, he calls "the English Peyresc."

Very curious coincidence of an event after a dream, dream, which, had it happened to a man of a less forcible mind than that of Peyresc, might have rendered him superstitious for the remainder of his life.

Peyresc and M. Rainier lodged together at an inn in the mid-way between Montpellier and Nifmes. They went to bed in the fame room, and in the midst of the night Rainier hearing his friend make a great noise in his fleep, awoke him, and asked him what was the matter with him that his fleep was fo diffurbed. "Alas! " my good friend," replied Peyresc, " you have " fpoiled the most agreeable dream I ever had. " I dreamed that I was at Nismes, and that a " goldsmith of that city offered me a golden " coin of Julius Cæsar for four quart d'écus, " and just as I was giving him the money you " awoke me." Peyresc, thinking no more of his dream, went to Nismes, and while his dinner was getting ready he walked about the town, and went (as his cuftom was) into a goldfmith's shop to ask if he had any thing curious to dispose of. The goldsmith told him that he had a coin of Julius Cæfar in gold. Peyresc, taking the coin, asked him the price of it, and was told that it was four quart d'écus. Peyresc returned to the inn of his friend, and told him with great rapture, that his dream, which his kindness had interrupted, was then realized indeed.

LOUIS THE FOURTEENTH,

CALLED THE GREAT.

[1643-1715.]

From a conversation the great Prince of Condé had with this Prince when he was very young, he said of him to Cardinal Mazarin, "There is stuff enough in him to make three "Kings and one honest man." The slattery and servility of his subjects destroyed in Louis the kingly part of his character; that of the honest man remained, as Louis was supposed, during his very long reign, never to have broken any promise which he had made, nor ever to have betrayed a secret consided to him.

Louis, from very early life, appears to have been modest and prudent. Segrais says, that when this Monarch was about seventeen years of age, he followed him and his brother, the Duke of Orleans, out of the play-house, and that he heard the Duke ask the King, what he thought of the play they had just then been seeing, and which had been well received by the

the audience. "Brother," replied Louis, "do "not you know that I never pretend to give my opinion on any thing that I do not perfectly understand?"

In Pelitson's Works there are some notes of a conversation that passed between Louis, three noblemen, and himself, at the siege of Lisle in 1667. Louis, after mentioning the difficulties and dangers that had occurred during the fiege of this town, adds, "All these circumstances have " only served to render my courage stronger; and " as they are in general known to my army, I " was afraid that they would intimidate my " foldiers; and feeing that our fuccess would " depend upon our extreme vigilance and ac-"tivity, and in our preventing the inhabitants " of the place from becoming foldiers, which " they would do, if they were to gain the least " advantage over us, I thought that there was " nothing but my example, and that of my " Officers, and of my Nobility, that could in-" fpire my army with an extraordinary courage, " that at first astonished the enemy. On these ec accounts, I have been anxious that my pre-" fence should animate every action of my fol-" diers; and that nothing whatever might ef-" cape me, I have paffed every night with the " advanced guard, at the head of my iquadrons, " and

" and I have spent every day in the trenches, " fo that if the enemy wished to make any attempt upon my lines, or thought fit to make " any fortie from the town, I might have been " prepared to charge upon them with all my <sup>56</sup> Court. These then are the true reasons that " have made me appear perhaps a little more ac-" tive at the head of my army than a King ought " to be (who had not all these motives), and " in my fituation I am better pleafed with be-" ing a little too rash, when I see the enemy, 44 than with being a little too prudent. Yet " flill you see the enemy have so far respected " my person hitherto, that they have not yet " fired at me, as they could easily have done; " and I hope that God will yet preserve my life " a long time, for the good of my kingdom, " and that I may live to acknowledge your " fervices and your friendship.

"I know well," added Louis, "that ca"lumny attacks the persons of Kings as well as "those of other men; and though its arrows
"are more concealed, they do not fail to penc"trate the heart of every Sovereign, when they "are only defended by the external marks of "royalty. When a King is pleased with hear"ing himself continually praised, and when "his heart is as little nice as his ears, he is not
"unusually

"unufually the only person in his kingdom that is satisfied with himself. Our sacred person alone does not render our reputation facred; and though I know very well, that there ought to be a great deal of difference between the courage of a King and that of a private person, our good actions and our virtues can alone insure us immortality.

"Kings are more cruelly treated with re-" fpect to their conduct than other men, as " their hearts are not, like their actions, ex-" posed to the eyes of their subjects. Subjects " in general judge of the actions of Princes " from their own interests and their own pas-" fions, and very rarely according to candour " and justice. Thus it happens that Kings " are often blamed for what they ought to be " praised, and when perhaps, to perform their " duty properly, they are forced to facrifice " every thing to the good of their people. I " have always thought, that the first virtue " in a Sovereign is that of firmness of mind, " and that he should never permit his resolu-" tion to be shaken either by blame or by " praise; and that to govern well the kingdom " entrusted to his care, the happiness of his " fubjects should be the pole to which his " actions should point, without taking the least " notice

" notice of the storms and the different tempests that may agitate his ship."

Louis when he was thirty-three years of age, wrote fome directions for his fon (le Grand Dauphin, as he was called), which are preserved in the King's Library at Paris. Pelisson is supposed to have corrected them. They begin thus:

"You will find nothing, my fon, so completely laborious as great idleness, if you have the misfortune to fall into that vice; disgusted in the first place with business, afterwards with your pleasures, and at last with the idleness itself, and looking in vain for that which you can never find, the sweets of repose and of leisure, without some occupation or some fatigue that must always prescede that happy state.

"The principal business of a King is to let good sense have fair play in every thing. Good sense acts naturally, and without any great effort. What employs us properly is very often attended with less fatigue than that which would merely amuse us, and the utility of it is always evident. A King can have no satisfaction equal to that of being able

238 LOUIS THE FOURTEENTH.

- " able to observe every day how much he has
- " increased the happiness of his subjects, and
- how those excellent projects succeed, of which
- " hinself gave the plan and the defign.
- "Consider after all, my dear son, that we not only are deficient in gratitude, and in justice, but in prudence and in good sense, when we do not pay the proper degree of veneration to that Being whose vicegerents (heutenans) only

×

" we are."

In these observations the natural good sense and good intentions of the Monarch break out. in spite of the wretched and confined education which Mazarin gave him, in order completely to govern him, and of which he and his people ever afterwards felt the ill effects. Abbé de Longuerue fays of Louis, "that he was natu-" rally a great friend of justice, and of good intentions, but that he was extremely igno-" rant in matters of science and literature;" or, as he puts it more strongly "il ne scavoit " rien de rien. So," fays he " his Majesty was " continually deceived. He was really afraid " of men of parts. Il craignit les esprits, that " was his expression. A Foreign minister," adds the Abbé, "used to say, that there were " most " most affuredly in Louis the Fourteenth's " time many men of merit in France, but " that really he never saw one of them in " place."

Louis had a violent paffion for building, and preferred, it feems, the marshy and low situation of Versailles to the dry and elevated site of St. Germain, that he might not see from his windows the steeples of the Royal Abbey of St. Denis, in which his predecessors had been buried, and in which himself was to rest. How mortified would this Prince have been, had he known, that in all the public and private edifices taken together which he had caused to be built, there are according to the calculation of a celebrated Scotch Antiquary at Rome, fewer cubic feet of masonry than in the single fabric erected by a Roman Emperor, the Amphitheatre of Vespasian!

Louis had the merit of knowing his own ignorance in literary matters; for when once on his paffage to the Army in Flanders, he had occasion to spend some time at a small Abbey of Benedictins, the Prior talked to his Majesty about the charters it contained. "Alas, Sır," replied Louis, "you are much too learned for

240 LOUIS THE FOURTEENTH.

- " me! My cousin the Prince of Condé will be
- " here in a few days: you may tell all this to
- " him, he is the Doctor of our family."

Louis one day asked Racine, who was the French writer that had done most honour to his reign. Racine replied, "Moliere, Sire." "I did not think so," answered Louis, "but you are a better judge of these matters than "I am."

As Louis's walk was different from that of his Courtiers, so was his pronunciation. François, the name of his subjects, he always pronounced like the name of the Saint.

Louis, on hearing some public Speaker make use of these words, "Le Roi et l'Etat," exclaimed loudly, "L'Etat! c'est moi." And well indeed might he make that exclamation; for when, in the distresses of his kingdom, in the latter part of his life, he consulted the Doctors of the Sorbonne whether he might raise taxes by his own authority, without the formality of their being registered by the Parliaments of his kingdom, they answered in the affirmative.

In an Inscription under his statue he was thus stiled: "The glory of Kings, the delight" of the human race, the terror of his enemies, the idol of his subjects, and the admiration of all."

—nihil est, quod credere de se Non possit, cum laudatur Dus æqua potestas.

Ye shameless flatterers of a mortal's pride, Your Monarch's power with that of Jove divide: Crush'd by his dire and arbitrary sway, Yourselves shall curse th' idolatry ye pay.

Segrais fays, "that fome young Noblemen, who were about the person of Louis the "Fourteenth, were talking one day before him " (when he was about eleven years old) of the " despotic power of the Emperors of Turkey, " and what great things they did in confe-" quence of it. Aye," faid the young Prince, " this may be called reigning indeed." The Marshal d'Estrées, who happened to be present, faid, "Your Majesty perhaps does not know, " that even in the course of my life I have " known three or four of these Emperors put " to death by the bow-string." Marshal de Villeroi, Governor to the young King, immediately arose from his seat, went up to d'Estrées, and thanked him for the excellent leffon which he had given to his royal pupil.

Louis feems to have had one part of an honest and ingenuous mind: he was inclined to take advice, and to alter his conduct when he was convinced it was wrong. His person was very beautiful, and he was very fond of exhibiting it. He very often danced upon the stage of Versailles in some of Quinault's Operas. Racine, in the Tragedy of Britannicus, had the boldness and the kindness to say of Nero,

Il excelle à conduire un char dans sa carrière,

A disputer des prix indignes de ses mains,

A se donner lui même en spectacle au Romains.

With sutile skill and ill-directed grace,

He pants to outstrip the chariots in the race.

Gazed at by millions of plebeian eyes,

From his own subjects hands he seeks the prize;

A prize that but proclaims the victor's shame;

How sar below a Monarch's nobler aim!

The judicious Monaich took the hint, and never afterwards appeared upon the stage.

Louis, who had excellent natural fense, and who was by no means sanguinary, was most probably led into the cruelties which he permitted to be exercised against his Protestant subjects, by his sanatical Chancellor Le Tellier, and his Confessor of the same name; for in the Instructions to his Son before mentioned in this Article, he tells him, "It appears to me, my * fon, that those persons who wish to employ " extreme and violent measures do not under-" stand the nature of this evil, occasioned, in " part, by the heat of the imagination; which " should rather be suffered to die away, and " to extinguish itself insensibly, than to be insee flamed afresh by strong opposition; more par-"ticularly when the corruption is not confined " to a small number of persons who are known, " but diffused through all parts of the State. " And besides, these Reformers speak truth " upon many fubjects. The best method, "then, to reduce by degrees the number of "the Huguenots in my kingdom, was most " certainly not that of continually haraffing " them with some new and rigorous edict."

" Opuscules Literaires," Paris 1767.

Louis, who affected to style himself " Le " Doyen des Rois," the Father of the Kings of his time, on account of his age, and the number of years in which he had reigned, used occasionally to make this very melancholy observation: "When I bestow a favour, I make one " person ungrateful, and nineteen persons discontented."

M. du Fresne took occasion one day to remark to this Prince, that he did not appear to be sufficiently cautious in the liberty which he gave to every-one to approach his person, and more particularly when he was at war with a Nation * that were irritated against him, and were capable of attempting any thing. "I have "received, Sir," said Louis, "a great many hints like this; in short, if I were capable of taking them, my life would not be worth having: it is in the hands of God, he will dispose of it as he pleases, and therefore I do not presume to make the least alteration in my conduct."

Louis was once harangued by a very indifferent orator, to whom his Majesty paid a handsome compliment. A Lady who was present appeared much surprized at the civil things that Louis said to him. "I think indeed, Ma"dam, as you do of the speaker," said the Monarch; "but if a civil word or two will "render a man happy, he must be a wretch in"deed who will not give them to him."

This Prince had granted a paidon to a Nobleman who had committed fome very great crime. M. Voisin, the Chancellor, ran to him in his closet, and exclaimed, "Sire, you cannot par-

"I have promised him," replied the King, who was ever impatient of contradiction; "go and "fetch the Great Seal."—"But, Sire, ——" ——"Pray Sir do as I order you." The Chancellor returns with the seals, Louis applies them himself to the instrument containing the pardon, and gives them again to the Chancellor. "They are polluted now, Sire," exclaims this intrepid and excellent Magistrate, pushing them from him on the table, "I cannot take them "again."—"What an impracticable man!" cries the Monarch, and throws the pardon into the fire. "I will now, Sire, take them again: "the fire, you know, purifies every thing."

One of this Monarch's favourite Valet-de-Chambres had a law fuit with his uncle, and requested the King to take a part in it for him. "Alas! Sire," said he, "it is no very great difficulty; you have only to speak one little word."—"That, my friend," replied Louis, gives me the least apprehension. But, were you now in your uncle's situation, should you like that I should speak that little word?"

In 1673 the Dauphin was afflicted with a disorder of no great consequence, which some of the tatlers about the Court of Versailles affected to attribute to the feverity with which he was treated by his Governor, the excellent Duc de Montausier. Louis, however, soon silenced this nonsense, by saying, "I have only one son; " yet I had much rather that he should die, " than that he should not know his duty, and " so become a burden and a curse to his " people."

"I had once," fays Duclos, "the curiofity to make out, from the papers of M. Colbert, the amount of the fums of money given away by Louis the Fourteenth, in pensions to men of learning, of talents, and of knowledge, as well in foreign countries as in his own. It did not exceed 66,300 livres; 52,300 livres to Frenchmen, and 14,000 to strangers; making, in the whole, about three thousand and four hundred pounds sterling a year; the expence of a few hours only of the destructive wars in which he engaged his country.

Louis, on his death-bed, thus addreffed his infant grandfon, afterwards Louis XV.

" My dear child, you will very foon become the King of a great country. What I wish particularly to recommend to you, is, never

- " never to forget the obligations you have to
- " your Creator. Remember that by his power
- " alone you are every thing that you are.
- "Strive to preserve peace with your neigh- " bours. I have been too fond of war. Do
- " not imitate me in that, nor in the great ex-
- " pences in which I have been involved.
- " Take advice in every thing; and be care-
- " ful to inform yourself what advice is best,
- " and always follow it.
  - " Ease your subjects from taxes as soon as
- " you can, and you will then have the happi-
- " ness of doing that which I had the misfor-
- " tune never to be able to do *."

PRINCE OF CONDÉ.

THE term petits maîtres was first applied to this great General and his followers, who, slushed with the victories of Lens, &c. which they had gained, on their return from the army to Paris,

* These sentences were, till the beginning of the French Revolution, inscribed, in gold letters, over the head of the bed in which the Kings of France used to sleep.

gave themselves a great many airs, and were insufferably impertinent and troublesome.

Richelieu, a very good judge of men, was much struck with the precocity of talents that appeared in this Prince when he was very young. He told Chavigny, "I have been just now "having a conversation of two hours with the "young Duke d'Enghuein upon the art mili-"tary, upon religion, and upon the interests "of Europe: he will be the greatest General in Europe, and the first man of his time, "and perhaps of the times to come."

Louis XIV. who could never forgive the part Condé took against him in the Fronde, seems never to have entirely given him his confidence, or to have made that use of the talents of this Prince which he should have made.

The Prince of Condé was a striking illustration of the observation made by the acute Dr. Johnson, that in public speaking there was often more of knack and of habit than of real talent or knowledge: for whilst Condé never rose to speak in the Parliament of Paris but to disgrace himself, Gaston his cousin, with a mind very inferior to his in every respect, was very well heard in that Assembly.

His Sovereign Louis XIV. once paid Condé a very handsome compliment. The Prince, in the latter part of his life, was very lame with the gout, and was one day in that situation apologizing to him for making him wait for him at the top of the great stair-case at Versailles, which he was ascending very slowly. "Alas! "my cousin," replied he, "who that is so loaded with laurels as yourself can walk fast?"

The Prince was a man of some learning himfelf, and extremely fond of the conversation of learned and ingenious men. Moliere, Boileau, and the celebrated writers of their time, were frequently with him at Chantilly. He, however, expected as much deference from these great men in literary matters, as he had been used to exact from his Officers at a Council of War. Boileau, however, had once the spirit to contradict him on some subject of literature, of which most probably he knew more than the Prince. Condé soon fired, and darted his eyes upon him, sparkling with rage and indignation. "Upon my word," faid the fatirift, "in fu-" ture I will take particular care to be of the " fame opinion with the Prince of Condé when " he is in the wrong."

Pains had been early taken by some of the Prince's supposed friends to shake his belief in Christianity; he always replied, "You give yourselves a great deal of unnecessary trouble: the dispersion of the Jews will always be an undeniable proof to me of the truth of our holy religion."

Some writer fays, that the disposition of a man is to be known by his hand-writing. This observation seems realized in this great Prince, who was a man of a very violent and hasty temper. Segrais says of him, "The Prince of Condé used to write without taking his pen from the paper till he had finished a sentence, and without putting any points or adjuncts to his letters."

"A good General," faid this great Prince, "may be beaten, but he can never be furprized."

One of his maxims was, that, to enable a General not to be afraid of his enemies when they were near to him, he should have taken the precaution to have been afraid of them when they were at a distance from him.

Continually fuccessful himself, he still made great allowances for the wart of success in others;

others; and when all the military men of his country were outrageous at M. de Crequi on the loss of the battle of Consarbech, he nobly exclaimed, like a man who judged of men from themselves, and not from what had happened to them, "All that M. de Crequi" wanted to make him one of the best Genemake in the universe, was to have been defeated."

In 1679 he requested his Sovereign to permit him to retire to his Chateau of Chantilly, on account of his ill health. Louis replied, "It is with the greatest regret that I grant you "the permission you desire; for, alas! my "Cousin, I then shall be deprived of the ad-"vice of the greatest man in my kingdom."

In his retreat he amused himself with the embellishment of his domain, with his books, and with the conversation of a few friends, amongst whom were Mohere, Boileau, and Father Bouhours.

On his death-bed his Confessor told him, that he could not administer to him the sacraments, unless he pardoned every one who had offended him. "Alas! my good Father," replied he, "how can you insist on that topic;

- " you who know very well that I never enter-
- " tained the least resentment against any per-
- " fon during the whole course of my life?"

When he took leave of his fon the Duc d'Enghuein, he gave him his bleffing, and faid, fixing his eyes upon him in the most affectionate manner, "In this world, my son, which "I am about to quit, there is only one thing that is folid and deserves esteem; that is, to have been throughout life an honest man *."

GASTON, DUKE OF ORLEANS.

POSTERITY will not readily forgive this Prince for not exerting himself sufficiently to save his friend, the illustrious Montmorency, from the scaffold; the same feebleness of mind infecting him in this, as on most other occasions.

" John Locke."
During

&quot; This life (fays the excellent Mr. Locke, in the "last letter he wrote to his friend Mr. Anthony Collins) is a scene of vanity that soon passes away, and affords no folid satisfaction but in the consciousness of doing well, and in the hopes of another life. This is what I can fay upon experience, and what you will find to be true when you come to make up the account. Adieu, I leave my best wishes with you.

253

During the time of the Fronde, had his mind been fufficiently steady and determined, he might have been the arbiter of his divided and distracted country.

Antonio Priuli gives this melancholy account of the latter years of a Punce of the Blood, brother to one Monarch, and uncle to another:

"Gaston," says he, "on the King's (Louis " the XIVth) triumphant return into Paris, " with his mother Anne of Austria and the " Cardinal, fet out for his palace near Blois, " without feeing or taking leave of his Sove-" reign; and having been in the former part of " his life wholly managed by his fervants, he " gave himself entirely up in the latter part " of it to the management of his wife, Marga-" ret of Lorraine. He became a great sports-" man and a great botanist, and not only be-" came devout himself, but inspired the whole " city of Blois with the same spirit. He died " (as is supposed) of a lethargy, having had " antimony improperly administered to him; " and after having figured away as a Leader " of a Party and a Prince, was buried in the "Royal Abbey of St. Denis, with a private " funeral, the Heralds who attended the corpse " being barely paid their charges. Thus end-`" ed,"

254 GASTON, DUKE OF ORLEANS.

"ed," adds Priuli, "Gaston Duke of Orleans, "who having been a hopeful child, passed his youth in pleasure, always under the direction of his own servants, and never at his own disposal."

Gaston, who was a man of parts though not of understanding, left behind him "Memoirs" of French History from the Year 1608 to "1635." They are printed.

PHILIP, DUKE OF ORLEANS, BROTHER OF LOUIS THE FOURTEENTH.

ABBE DE LONGUERUE thus describes this Prince:

"He was continually talking, without ever faying any thing. He never had but one book, his mass-book, which his clerk of the closet used always to carry in his pocket for him."

He was a Prince of greater bravery than his brother, and in engagements exposed his perfon much more. This made Louis say one day to him, after a battle, " Mon frere, vous voulez

"donc devenir sac-à-terre." The celebrated Mothe le Vayer was Preceptor to this Prince. His son, the Abbé de Vayer, printed in 1670 a translation of Florus into French, made, as he said, by this Prince. It was most probably the work of the Preceptor.

The Duke of Orleans married Henrietta-Maria, fifter of Charles the Second. His brother, after the most strict inquiry that he was able to make into the death of that accomplished Princess, was perfectly convinced that the Duke of Orleans was not in the smallest degree implicated in it.

MADAME DE LA VALIERE, mistress of Louis the Fourteenth.

This beautiful and gentle-minded woman feems, differently from the other Mistresses of that Prince, to have loved the man and not the Sovereign, in Louis the Fourteenth. When the death of the son she had by that Monarch was announced to her, "Alas," faid she, "I have "greater reason to be grieved for his birth "than for his death!" Many years before she died she retired into the Convent of the Carmelites melites at Paris, where she endeavoured to expiate her faults by the most exemplary penitence. Not long before she expired, she exclaimed, after having resuled every consolation that was offered her, "It is sit that so great a sinner as myself should die in the greatest torments."

Whilft she was in the Convent she wrote a finall devotional Treatise, entitled, "Reslec-" tions upon the Mercy of God." The eloquent Bossuer preached the sermon upon her taking the veil, at which were present Louis the Fourteenth's Queen and all the Court. He took his text from the following passage in the Apocalypse: "And he that sat upon the Throne "said, I will renew all things."

The celebrated picture of the Magdalen, painted by Le Brun for the Convent in which Madame de La Valiere resided, has been falsely supposed to have been that of this beautiful and sincere penitent. The features are entirely dissimilar.

MADAME DE MAINTENON.

ARBE DE CHOISY dedicated his Translation of Thomas-à-Kempis to this celebrated lady, with this motto from the Psalms:

"Hear my Daughter, and fee, and incline thine ear, and the King shall defire thy beauty."

The edition was foon suppressed.

Madame de Maintenon used to say of herself, "I was naturally ambitious. I fought against that passion. I really thought that I should be happy when the desires that I had were gratisted. That infatuation lasted only three days."

- "Ales," fays she, in one of her letters to her niece, "why cannot I give you my experience?
- "why cannot I shew you how the great are devoured by ennu, and with what difficulty
- " they get through their day? Do not you
- " fee that I die of mifery in a fituation fo
- " much beyond my most extravagant wishes?
- "I have been young and pretty, and was a
- " general favounte. In a more advanced age,
- "I spent my time in cultivating my under-
- " flanding by reading and by conversation.

  vol iv. " At

" the

Peter the Great, when he came to Paris, was very anxious to fee Madame de Maintenon. She was very infirm, and in bed when he visited her. He drew aside the curtains to look at that face which had captivated her Sovereign. A blush o'erspread her pale cheeks for an instant. The Czar retired.

MASQUE DE FER.

THE following account of this celebrated perfonage is given on the authority of M. Falconet, a learned and cloquent Countellor of the last Parliament of Dauphiné.

"In the manuscript Memoirs of M. de la Reinterie, lately in the possession of the Marquis de Messinon-Roman, at Paris, M. de la Reinterie says, That when he commanded in the fortress of Pignerol, a prisoner who was confined in the citadel of that place, one day shut the door of his room with great violence upon the officer who waited upon him, and ran immediately down stairs, in order to escape from his confinement: he was, however, stopped by the centinel at the bottom of the stairs. The officer in the mean time cried out from the window, that

9 2

" the prisoner was making his escape, and re-" quested the assistance of the garrison. The " officer upon guard immediately came up " and laid hold of the prisoner, who was scuf-" fling with the centinel. The officer drew " his fword, when the prisoner cried out in " a very commanding tone of voice, Songez " à ce que vous faites, Monsieur: Respectez le " fang de vos Souverains-Take care what you " do, Sir: Respect the blood of your Sove-" reigns. In the mean time the officer who had been locked in came down stairs, and, " on hearing what the prisoner had faid, put " his hand upon his mouth, and defired all the " persons present never to mention what they " had heard him fay; who was immediately " reconducted to his old apartment, and guard-" ed with more care than before.

"M. de la Reinterie fays, that he told the flory to a few confidential persons about the Court of Versailles, whose names he mentions in his Memoirs, and that, except to them, he always preserved the most profound secrecy of this very extraordinary circumstance."

in the opinion of one of the Ministers of the late King or France, Louis the Sixteenth, the fecret fecret of this extraordinary personage died with Louis the Fisteenth and M. d'Argensen, Lieutenant de Police. He was buried in the church next to the Bastile, at Paris, by the name of Marchiali.

HENRY,

was the grandfon of Henry Duke of Guife, furnamed La Bolofré. He was intended for the profession of the Church, and at a very early age was presented to the Archbishopric of Rheims, which he quitted, as well as the habit of a Pricft, on the death of his brother, to marry Anne, Princels of Mantua. The Cardinal de Richelieu opposing the match, he fled with his mistress to Cologne, where he quitted her for Madame de Boffut, whom he marned, and whom he likewife quitted and returned to Paris. The disposition of his ancestors however foon after discovering itself in him, he engaged in the conspiracy of the Count de Soussons and the Court of Spain against Richeliau. After having fled from France to Rome on the difcovery of the plot, he was condemned by the Parliament of Paris to lose his head. He foon afterwards broke with the Spaniards, declared against them, and in 1647 was elected by the Neapolitans, who had revolted against Philip the Fourth, the General of their armies, and the defender of their liberty. He accepted these horours with great willingness, and with a fingle fe ucca made his way through the Spanish fleet to Naples, where he was received with the greatest acclamations of joy, and from whence, after experiencing fome fuccefs, and having behaved with greater courage than conduct, not being properly feconded by the Court of France, he was obliged to fly, and being taken prisoner by some Spanish troops, was carried to Spain, where he remained till 1652. After his return to Paris, he diffipated amongst the pleasures of that Capital, the affliction which the loss of a Crown so near to him had occafioned. He made a conspicuous figure with the Prince of Condé in the celebrated tournament of 1660 in Paris. They were stilled by the Parisians, "Les Heros de l'Histoire & de la " Fchle * "

During the revolution of Naples, one of the mob, accompanied by a troop of banditti,

* The name of the Duke of Guife's Secretary was Centantes. The Duke faid, on fetting out for Naples, "Every thing in this expedition exhibits fomething of romance, "even to the name of the Secretary."

treated him with great infolence; boasting, that as he had cut off the head of the Duke de Matalone, he would likewise cut off his head. The Duke, indignant at such brutality, clapped spurs to his horse, pushed him down, and rode over him. Some one asking him if he was not asraid to do this, as he should rather have endeavoured to appease than irritate the populace of Naples, he replied with a smile, "I am not asraid of the mob. When God forms a man of quality, he always puts somewhing between his two eyes, which a common man can never venture to look at without trembling."

The Duke being one day pursued and surrounded by an immense number of the people of Naples, who threatened to kill him, he turned round with great fang froid, and laid hold of one of the principal rioters. This bold action produced such an effect upon the others, that they immediately dispersed.

When the Duke headed the revolt of the Neapolitans against their Sovereign, Philip the Fourth of Spain, it was a time of revolutions: The English had beheaded Charles the First; the Parisians had taken up arms against their infant Monarch, Louis the Fourteenth; the Portuguese had regained their country from the Spaniards; the Turks had massacred their Sultan Ibrahim; the Algerines had killed their Dey; the kingdom of Indostan was agitated by civil wars; and the Chinese had been conquered by the Tartars.

The Marquis of Monte Sylvano was in prifon at Napies, and was to have fuffered death. The Duke delivered him from confinement on the day that he made his entrance into Naples. Soon after the Marquis engaged in a confpiracy against the Duke, and gave arms to the conspirators. Being taken and brought to the Duke, the latter contented himself with telling him, that the shame arising from his base action was the severest punishment that a man of quality and courage like him could suffer.

This spirited Nobleman, whose whole life scens to have consisted merely of so many scenes of romance, and to have partaken equally of bad and or good fortune, says of himself, "Neither in my extle at Rome, nor when I was taken prisoner, nor during all the time that I remained at Naples, could any person operve the least alteration or change in my countenance. The different events, as well so that the same of the same in th

- of my bad as good fortune, never gave me the least uneasiness or inquietude; having always acted with the same fang froid in every thing in which I was concerned, as if I had
- " not the least interest in it."

The Duke died at Paris, in 1664, at the age of fifty. The Memoirs of his Life are extremely entertaining. They are faid to have been compiled by St. Yon, his Secretary.

CARDINAL DE RETZ.

Henault applies the following paffage in Tacitus to this celebrated Demagogue: "Non "tam pramis periculorum, quàn applis periculis, "latus pro certis et olim partis, nova, ambigua, "ancipitia, mallebat." The fagacicus Richelieu early discovered the disposition of De Retz, and, according to Segrais, though he was of an antient and illustrious family, never intended to give him a benefice of any value or consequence. In very early life De Retz wrote the "History of the Conspiracy of Fiesqui against "the Aristocracy of Genoa," in which he took the part of the Conspirator. He seems by pature to have had all the qualities requisite to become become a favourite with the people. Brave, generous, eloquent, full of refources, and fettered by no principle, he dazzled the multitude of Paris, who feem ever to have been more taken with actions of eclat and of enterprize, than with all the efforts of modest and humble virtue. On seeing one day a carbine levelled at him by some one he did not know, he had the presence of mind to cry out, "If your Father, "Sir, were now seeing what you were about!"—This speech immediately disarmed the fury of the affassin.

The Cardinal feems to have aroned for the follies and irregularities of his youth by the honest consession he made of them in his Memoirs. He appears in them to have been a man of great talents, and of good natural disposition, perverted by vanity, and the desire of that distinction, which, if not acquired by honest means, disgraces instead of dignifying those who are so unfortunate as to possess it. Had he directed his great powers of mind in endeavours to unite, instead of efforts to divide his unhappy and distracted country, he would have endeared himself most effectually to his countrymen, and would have deserved the praises of posterity, by exhibiting an example which too rarely occurs, of a Politician facrificing his refentment to the good of the State.

The Memoirs of this celebrated Personage, written by himself, are extremely scanty and impersect: they give no account either of the early or of the latter part of his life. He entrusted the Manuscript to some Nuns of a Convent near Comerci in Lorraine, who garbled them. James the Second, however, told the last Duke of Ormond, that he had seen a persect copy of them, which was lent to him by Madame Caumatin.

Joh, his Secretary, describes his Master in his retreat at Comerci in no very favourable manner; as idling away his time in hunting, going to puppet-shows, now and then pretending to administer justice amongst his tenants, writing a page or two of his own life in solio, and settling some points in the genealogy of his family—that of Gondi. The Cardinal's reply to Joli's iemonstrances to him on this subject was a curious one: "I know all this as well as "you do, but I don't think you will get any "one else to believe what you say of me." An opinion so highly advantageous to the Cardinal's talents and character had gone out into the world, that the people of France could not bring themselves to think ill of one who had been a very popular Demagogue amongst them.

On the day in which he was permitted to have an audience of Louis the Fourteenth at Veriailles, the Court was extremely full, and the highest expectations were formed of the manners and appearance of the Cardinal: when however they saw an hump-back'd, bow-legg'd, decrepit old man, who perhaps did not feel much elevated with his situation, their expectations were sadly disappointed; and particularly so, when his Sovereign merely said to him, "Your Eminence is grown very gray since I last faw you." To this the Cardinal replied, "Any person, Sire, who has the missortune to incur your Majesty's displeasure, will very readily become gray."

St. Evremond has preserved an anecdote of the Cardinal's nobleness of mind and liberality during his retreat at Comerci. As he was riding out on horseback, he was surrounded by some Spanish soldiers that were in the neighbourhood. The Officer however, on being told his name, ordered him to be released, and dismounting from his horse, made an apology for the behaviour of his soldiers. The Cardinal, taking taking a valuable diamond ring from his finger, presented it to the Officer, saying, "Pray, Sir, " at least permit me to render your little ex" cursion not entirely useless to you."

De Retz refigned the Archbishopric of Paris, and procured in exchange for it the rich Abbey of St. Denis. He lived long enough to pay all his debts, and divided his time between Paris and St. Denis: at the latter place he died at a very advanced age, and in the strongest sentiments of piety and devotion. He is occasionally mentioned in Madame de Sevigné's Letters, as a man of great talents for conversation, and much afflicted with the head-ach. He had the honesty to say of himself, "Mankind sup-" posed me extremely enterprising and daunt-" lefs when I was young, and I was much more " fo than they could poffibly imagine:" and this may be readily perceived, from an anfwer which he made to some one who reproached him, when he was young, with owing a great deal of money. "Why, man," replied he, " Cæsar, at my age, owed fix times as much as " I do."

No one knew better how to manage and cajole the multitude than Cardinal de Retz did, yet he complains that they left him at the Angelus' bell bell to go to dinner. One of his maxims respecting the affembling of that many-headed Monster should be diligently considered both by the Leaders of Parties and by the Governors of Kingdoms: "Quiconque assemble le
"Peuple l'emeut.—Whoever brings the people
"together, puts them in a state of commo"tion."

CARDINAL JULIUS MAZARIN,

on his triumphant return to Paris, after the Peace of the Pyrenees, created a great number of Dukes; and on being asked why he was so profuse of that honour, replied, "I will make "fuch a number, that it shall be disgraceful to be a Duke and not to be a Duke." Though a very able, he was a very timid Minister. His brother the Cardinal of Aix used to say of him, "Only make a little bustle, and he will "desist." One of his favourite measures was procrastination. "Time and I against any other "two personages," was his reply, when urged to brisk and violent measures.

Mazarin was an extremely handsome man, and had a very fine face: this he was so anxious to preserve, that not many days before he died, died, he gave audience to the foreign Ministers with his face painted. This made the Spanish Minister say, "Voila un portrait qui resemble à "M. le Cardinal." As Tacitus says of Tiberius, though now his strength and his constitution began to fail, yet his diffimulation continued as perfect as ever. He sent for the Prince of Condé, and told him something considentially, which the Prince was the more included to believe, as he saw the dying state in which his Eminence was. A little time after his death, to his great astonishment, he found that even in that awful situation the Cardinal had not told him one word of truth.

Mazarin exhibited in himself a singular instance of the viciffitudes of fortune. He was of a very low extraction, had been a gambler, became Prime Minister of a great Country, was afterwards banished and a price set upon his head, and then returned triumphantly to his Administration with greater power than ever. Madame de Baviere says, that he was married to his Sovereign Anne of Austria, and that he treated her extremely ill.

The Cardinal was by no means a fanguinary Minister. He let the People talk and write as they pleased, and he acted as he pleased. A collection lection of the fatires written against him was preserved in the Colbert Library at Paris: it confifted of forty-fix volumes in quarto. When he laid any new tax, he used to ask his confidants what the good people of Paris were doing, whether they were ridiculing him, and making fongs and epigrams upon him. When he was answered in the affirmative, he used to say, "I can never have any reason to fear a Nation " which vents its spleen so very gaily; let them " laugh on."

CARDINAL JULIUS MAZARIN.

When the Cardinal was obliged to quit Paris, his effects were fold at public auction; his very valuable library was bought for the Court of Brunswick, and is at present in the capital of that Duchy.

Mazarin appears once in his life to have been in a very enviable fituation. When the French and Spanish armies were drawn up in order of battle near Casal, in the spring of the year 1631, and were about to engage, Mazarın galloped between them with his hat in his hand, exclaiming loudly, "Paix! paix!" The armies immediately halted, and in a few days afterwards peace was figned at Querasque, under the mediation of Uıban the Eighth, whose nephew, the Cardinal Legate, Mazarin attended on that happy occasion. The talents displayed by the latter in the negotiation, and the good offices he rendered the French Nation, recommended him to Louis the Thirteenth and the Cardinal de Richelieu. Mazarin, when Minister, caused a Medal to be struck in commemoration of this event, in which he is represented galloping between the two armies. On the reverse is this motto "Nunc or be fervire labor;" and how indeed can a man ferve the world better than by procuring it the bleffings of peace; by ftopping the fighs of the widow, the tears of the orphan, and the anguish of the parent; by checking the ravages of disease, of pestilence, and of famine; and by preventing the devastation of the universe, and the destruction of the human race! To any Prime Minister may we not fay, "Ha " tibi fint artes!"

Don Louis de Haro, the Spanish Minister, said of Mazarin, that he had one insuperable defect as a Politician, that he always meant to deceive those with whom he was treating, and of course put every one upon their guard against his tricks and finesses*.

The Spanish Proverb says acutely, "A man is a fool who does not consider, that whilst he is thinking, twenty persons are thinking likewise."

274 CARDINAL JULIUS MAZARIN.

Not many days before the Cardinal died. a comet appeared in France. Some of his fycophants, who were in his bed-chamber, told him. that as it was impossible for a man of his rank and talents to go out of the world in an ordinary way, this awful phenomenon of the Heavens was to announce to the world the death of fo great a Statesman and so consummate a Politician as himself. Mazarin coolly replied. " En verité, Messeurs, la comete me fait trop " d'honneur."

- By way of fecuring his estate to his heirs, and of quieting his conscience on his death-bed, he made a donation to his Sovereign Louis the Fourteenth of all his immense property. The King very nobly returned it to his heirs.

Beside one Bishopric, the Cardinal possessed, as Commendatary Abbot, nine rich Abbeys in France.

Two Latin lines well discriminated the difference between the government of this wily and temporizing Minister, and that of Richelieu:

Magnus uterque fuit. Sed dignum vindice nodum Richelius fecuit, Julius explicuit.

Two men arise and bear a splendid name. Richelieu and Mazarin, of doubtful fame; One One cuts the Gordian knot with ardour dread, The other patiently evolves each thread.

When a General was prefented to Mazarin for any particular expedition, his first question in his bad French was, "E? il houroux (heu"reux)?—Is he a fortunate General?" Cicero, when he recommended Pompey to the Roman people, to command against the Pirates, calls him, "Semper felix;" success in general attending upon those persons whose talents and whose diligence entitle them to it.

COLBERT.

Soon after this great Minister came into the management of the finances of France, he sent for the principal merchants of that kingdom, and, to ingratiate himself with them, and to acquire their considence, asked them what he could do for them. They unanimously replied, "Pray, Sir, do nothing! Lassez-nous faire—"Only let us do for ourselves."

M. D'Argenson says, that a person unknown to M. Colbert requested an audience of him, as having something of great importance to communicate to him. Being admitted to see M.

Colbert, he with great gravity advised him to encourage the trade and manufactures of his own country, which was large enough to supply itself and the other countries of Europe with what they wanted, and to give up all the French colonies in the East and West Indies to the Dutch and the English, who had very little territory of their own. Colbert did not deign to make any reply, but turned his extraordinary counsellor out of the room.

Colbert ordered Chapelain, the Author of the Epic Poem of the "Pucelle," to make him out a lift of the men of learning and talents in France who either wanted or deferved penfions from the Sovereign, and at the end of each name to append the character of their merit. Moliere was thus described:—"He is acquainted "with the true character of comedy, and he executes it naturally. The stories of his best pieces are in general imitated from others, but imitated with judgment. His plots are good, and he has only to avoid buffoonery."

Of that elegant, voluminous, and inaccurate historian Varillas, Chapelain says: "He is full of knowledge, particularly that of theology and history. He has written an Account of the

" the Rise of the House of Austria that is very

- " curious, and has been very much read. His
- " style is neither polished nor ornamented, but
- # it is found."

Louis the Fourteenth, at the instigation of Colbert, pensioned several men of learning and of science in the different Courts of Europe. Colbert, by his orders, wrote the following letter to the younger. Vossius:

" Sir,

" ALTHOUGH the King is not your fove-" reign, he is still very desirous to become your

"benefactor, and has ordered me to fend you

" the inclosed bill of exchange as a mark of " his efteem, and as a pledge of his protection.

" Every one knows how worthly you follow

" the example of your father, the celebrated

" Isaac Vossius, and that having received from

" him a name which he rendered illustrious

" by his writings, you still maintain the glory

" of it by your own. This being known to " his Majesty, he has great pleasure in reward" ing your merit; and I have the more fatif-

" faction in being ordered by his Majesty

" to make you that recompence, as at the

- " fame time I can affure you how much I " am, Sir,
  - "Your very humble and affectionate fervant,
    "COLBERT."

" Paris, June 2, 1663."

It has been computed, that Louis's well-judged liberality did not amount to more than eight thousand pounds a-year. Fifty or a hundred pounds a-year was the usual amount of each pension. Chapelain got something more for himself, and that, amongst other reasons, procured him the hatred and envy of his contemporaries and countrymen.

A few days before this great Financier died, Louis XIV. wrote to him with his own hand, to defire him to manage himfelf, and to take fome fustenance. They brought him a bason of broth, which he refused. His wife said to him, "Will you return an answer to the King?" He replied, "There is time enough for that. "I now am about to answer to the King of Kings."

On nearly the same occasion he said to his wife, "Madam, when I was in this closet," busied in his Majesty's business, neither you, nor any one else dared to attempt to come

" come in to disturb me; and now that I " am employed in business relative to my " falvation, you are continually interrupting " me."

Colbert honestly told Louis XIV. that he would ruin his subjects, if he continued to go on with those great buildings which he had begun. This speech made Louis tell Mansard, his Architect, "On me donne trop de degout." Je ne veux plus songer à bâter." It was, indeed, high time to say something to Louis on the subject, as in one year, according to Racine's "Fragmens Historiques," he spent sixteen millions of livres in building.

The Minister of Colbert's parish, that of St. Eustache at Paris, came to him on his death-bed to tell him, that he had ordered prayers to be put up in his church to the Almighty for the recovery of his health. "I hope not," replied Colbert: "let them be addressed to the Throne of Grace that I may find mercy."

GOMBERVILLE

published the very curious "Memoires du Duc "de Nevers," in two volumes. They begin at 1574 and go down to 1595. He was a quiet inoffensive man of letters, and resided chiesly with the illustrious hermits of Port Royal. He made this simple and elegant Epitaph for himself:

Les grands chargent leur sepulture De cent eloges superflus; Ma nassance fût fort obscure, Et ma mort encore plus.

Whilst pompous epitaphs in trophied state. The tombs embellish of the rich and great, Few words my humble lot may tessify; Obscure I liv'd and more obscurely die.

DUC DE LA ROCHEFOUCAULT.

- "THE Author of the celebrated Maxims "which bear his name, was not a man of
- " learning," fays Segrais, "but he was a man
- " of great good fense, and had a perfect know-
- " ledge of the world. This put him upon mak-
- " ing reflect ons, and upon reducing into apho- " rifms what he had been able to discover in the - " heart of man, with which he was most inti-
- " mately acquainted."

M. de la Rochefoucault was so accurate in the composition of his little book, that as he finished a Maxim, he used to send it to his friends friends for their opinion upon it. Segrais afferts, that some of his Maxims were altered thirty times. The Maxim, "that it shews a "wretched poverty of mind to have but one fort of understanding," took its rise from Boileau and Racine, who were extremely ignorant of every thing except poetry and literature.

"M. de la Rochefoucault," adds Segrais, "would have made a better Governor for the Dauphin, Louis the Fourteenth's only fon, than the Duke of Montausier;" being a man of great sweetness of temper, extremely infinuating in his address, and exceedingly agreeable in conversation. M. de la Rochefoucault could never belong to the French Academy, as he could never muster up courage enough to deliver to the Academy the speech which it was necessary to make in order to be admitted into that body.

This acute Nobleman was an instance of the truth of one of his own Maxims:

"There are certain persons who would never have been in love, had they not been told that such a passion really existed:"

for he used to say, that he knew nothing of love

282 DUC BE LA ROCHEFOUCAULT.

love but from Romances; and that he had never felt that passion in his own person.

Dr. Johnson used to say of Rochesoucault's Maxims, that it was almost the only Book written by a Gentleman which Authors by profession had any reason to be assaid of.

"The Duke very wifely never disputed in company. If any person differed from him in opinion, he merely said, Sir, you are then of that opinion? I am of mine; and so the matter rested," says Segrais.

JOHN GERARD VOSSIUS,

according to Aubrey, always wrote his Adverfaria or Common-Places on one fide only of a fheet of paper, so that, as occasion required, he only tore his papers, and fixed them together, and would so send them to the press without

* Sir Isaac Newton would never dispute in company. When he had delivered an opinion which any-one chose to controvert, he never was at the pains to defend it, but contented himself with saying, "I believe, Sir, if you will be at the trouble of examining my opinion, you will find I have very good reasons for it."

any more transcribing. This faved him a great deal of trouble.

According to the Authors of the Journal de Trevoux, no two men of learning ever differed more than Gerard Vossius and his son Isaac in the disposition of their minds. "The father," fay they, " formed his opinions upon what he " read; the fon took up an opinion, and read " only to establish it. The father was anxious " to get at the true meaning of an author whom " he confulted—to add to him no opinions of " his own; the fon took all possible pains to make the authors whom he confulted think " as he thought, and never piqued himself upon " making exact quotations from their writings. "The father looked upon the authors whom " he read as his masters; the for looked upon " them as his flaves, whom he could by to:ture " force to fay whatever he pleafed. The father " was anxious to inftruct, the fon to aftonish " mankind."

The fon, haac Vossius, affected to believe in the pretended antiquity of the Chinese nation, which he extended infinitely beyond the antiquity of the Hebrews. He easily gave credit to the exaggerated accounts of travellers, and seemed to have a passion for believing in the maryellous marvellous and the incredible. This made Charles the Second fay of him, "This M. Voffius " is indeed a very extraordinary man! he be-"lieves in every thing except in his Bible."

SALMASIUS.

THE lovers of literature must much regret that M. Lantin, who had conversed a good deal with this great scholar, and man of general knowledge, did not make, as he had once thought of doing, a "Solmafiana." Salmassus used to read and write in the midst of his menage, in company with his wife and children, completely unaffected by their noise. By way of faving himself the trouble of turning the paper, he used to write upon rolls of paper; and when he was asked how near he was to finishing any work, he used to say, not that he had fo many sheets, but that he had so many rolls of paper to finish. Vossius tells an anecdote of Salmasius, which shews how high an opinion he entertained of his own talents and learning.

&quot;M. Gaulmin and Mauffac meeting Salmafius one day in the King's Library at Paris, M, Gaulmin faid, I think that we three

- * are a match for all the learned men in Eu" rope taken together. Add to them all, re-
- " plied Salmasius, yourself and M. de Maussac,
- " and I could be a match for you all."
  - "The last time," says M. Lantin, "that
- " Salmasius was at Dyon, I had some conver-
- " fation with him respecting the troubles and
- " the civil war of England between Charles the - " First and his Parliament. He seemed to be
- " of the opinion of the High Presbyterian
- " party, who feemed to wish that the King
- " should be neither deposed nor brought to
- " the scaffold, but that his power should be in
- " fome respects curtailed and reduced. Sal-
- " massus thought an union of the Catholic and
- " of the Protestant Church impossible, and
- " that the plan of Grotius on that subject
- " would never fucceed."

Salmasius was born at Saumur in France, in the town and on the day on which the Duke and Cardinal of Guise were massacred by order of Henry the Third. On being asked when he was born, he replied, in allusion to these massacres, Cum cecid:t fato Consul uterque pari.

Salmafius

Salmasius used to say, he had once seen the Journal of Meyric Casaubon, which he kept in Latin; and that amongst other entries was the following: "Deus bone, hodiè catellus meus "pettine meo pexus est." Salmasius had made collections for the history of the European surnames, which he said were in general derived either from baptismal names, from the names of provinces and towns, from the names of trades and professions, or from peculiarities of person.

At the time of the death of Cardinal Richelieu, a friend of Salmasius was soliciting a pension for him from that Minuster, in order to keep in France a person of his (Salmasius's) talents. Salmasius said, "that he believed he " should with difficulty be prevailed upon to " receive a pension from the Court of France, " as fo much time and pains were employed " in procuring the payment of it." He faid, however, " he would very willingly receive the " profits of some landed property, if the King " would have the kindness to grant it him," and having afterwards understood that this offer was made him on the condition that he should write the history of the administration of Richelieu, he faid, " that he perhaps should not de-" ferve ferve it, as he was not a man to facrifice his pen to flattery."

Madame de Saumaise was a great shrew, and led her husband a weary life; she however used to say of him, "that he was the best gentle-" man amongst the scholars, and the best scholar amongst the gentlemen of his time."

Salmasius, after having quitted France on account of his religion, being a Protestant, resided in Holland. Sorbiere, in a letter to M. de Marre, thus describes his manner of receiving his literary friends:

" Every Sunday night he had a circle of " fifteen or twenty perions of note; fuch as " M. L'Empereur, De Laet, Grotius, &c. " whose conversation afforded both instruction " and amusement. The chief part of the time " that we were with him we fat round a great " fire, one corner of which he kept to himself, " and Madame de Saumaise had the other. " She occasionally mixed in the conversation, " and took especial care that not one of the " company should go away without having " received a sharp word or two from her. " Salmasius was not naturally inclined to talk, " but when once he began he displayed a " wonder-6

" wonderful fertility of mind, and an immenfe " erudition. I remember once, that I took to " Saimasius' circle a French gentleman who " had never feen him; and as we were going " thither, we agreed to make him talk about " the amusements of the field. We put him " upon that fubject, and my friend told me " on his return, that himself, who was an old " fportsman, could not have talked more per-" tinently upon the matter. He was aftonished " that a man of letters, who had spent so much " time in his study, and who was besides so bad " a horseman, had been able to pick up such " variety of information upon a fubject not " peculiarly interesting to him, for he told us " not only what he had been able to get from "those who had expressly written upon the " fubject, but what he could not know, unless " he had really been upon the ground, and " had himself killed a great quantity of game. " Our conversation was often infested," says Sorbiere, "if I may fo use the word to express " more strongly our indignation, by a Scotch " Profesfor, by name David Stuart, a Regent " of a College, who in the dullest and most " infipid manner contradicted every thing that " was advanced; and this tirefome fellow made " us lose much of the conversation of Sal-" massus, to whom indeed we afterwards com-" plained,

" plained, that he, who was in general pretty

" apt to be violent on fuch occasions, did not

" repress the pedantity of the Scotch Professor;

" repeating to him, " Oro qui reges consuevis

" tollere, cur non hunc regem jugulas? Operum

" hoc mihi crede tuorum est."

Salmasius, not contented with attacking Milton's arguments in defence of the execution of Charles the First, attacked the Latinity of his verses. He begins his Apology for Charles the First in this singular manner:

"O ye English, who toss about the heads of Kings as if they were tennis-balls, and play at bowls with crowns, and treat scepters with no more regard than if they were toys!"

GASSENDI

exhibits one of the most striking instances of the precocity of the human intellect. "At "the age of four years," says Bernier, "he "used to declaim his little sermons; at the age of seven he used to steal away from his parents, and spend a great part of the night in observing the stars. This made his friends vol. IV. " say,

" fay, that he was born an Astronomer. At " this age he had a dispute with the boys of " his village, whether the moon or the clouds " moved: to convince them that the moon " did not move, he took them behind a tree, " and made them take notice that the moon " kept its fituation between the fame leaves, " whilft the clouds paffed on. This early dif-" position to observation induced his parents " to cultivate his talents; and the clergyman " of his village gave him the first elements of " learning. His ardor for study became then " extreme; the day was not long enough for " him, and he often read a good part of the " night by the light of the lamp that was " burning in the church of his village, his " family being too poor to allow him candles " for his nocturnal studies. He often," adds Bernier, "took only four hours fleep in the " night. At the age of ten, he harangued " his Bishop in Latin (who passed through " Gaffendi's village on his Visitation) with such " ease and spirit, that the Prelate exclaimed, That lad will one day or other be the wonder " of his age!"

" fation, in which he discussed some very seri&quot;I had the curiofity," fays St. Evremond, to visit Gaffendi. After a very long converous subjects, he complained that Nature had " given fuch a degree of extent to our cu-" riofity, and fuch very narrow limits to our " knowledge. This, he assured me, he did not " fay to mortify the prefumption of any per-" fon, or from an affected humility, which is a "kind of hypocrify. He did not pietend to " deny but that he knew what might be "thought on many fubjects, but he dared " not venture to affirm that he completely " understood any one. His manner in conver-" fation was extremely agreeable; he had a " very polished and elegant understanding; he " had a great deal of delicate repartee; he was " in general filent, never oftentatiously ob-" truding upon other people either the acute-" ness of his understanding or the eloquence of " his conversation; he was never in a hurry to " give his opinion, before he knew that of the re persons who were conversing with him. When " men of learning introduced themselves to " him, he was contented with behaving to them with great civility, and was not anxious " to furprize their admiration by letting himse felf out before them. The entire tendency " of his studies was to make himself wifer and better; and to have this intention more conse stantly before his eyes, he had inscribed all his " books with these words, Sapere aude."

" tain degree of elevation which inspires dignity " and grandeur of sentiment."

Gaffendi's adversaries accused him of want of religion. This imputation seems ill-founded, as every Sunday and holiday he said mass as a priest: and, according to Gui Patin, the disorder of which he died was owing to his keeping Lent too strictly, contrary to the advice of that learned physician.

The principles of moral conduct which he laid down for the direction of his life were,—To know and fear God.—Not to be afraid of death; and to submit quietly to it whenever it should happen—To avoid idle hopes, as well as idle fears.—Not to defer till to-morrow any innocent amusement that may take place to-day.—To desire nothing but what is necessary.—To govern the passions by reason and good sense.

Gaffendi was a most excellent astronomer, and had a mind so fraught with knowledge, and at the same time so divested of prejudice, that he wrote against Aristotle (a bold attempt in the times in which he lived), and offered to prove, that many things which that great genius had advanced in philosophy were wrong.

Yet how vain are the speculations of the most comprehensive minds, when unaffisted by knowledge and experience! Gassendi, who was a dabbler in anatomy and medicine, wrote a treatise to prove that man was intended by nature to live only on vegetables.

In one of the letters of this celebrated philofopher he fays, that he was confulted by his friend and patron the Count d'Alais, Governor of Provence, on a phænomenon that haunted his bed-chamber while he was at Marfeilles on fome business relative to his office. The Count tells Gaffendi, that for feveral fuccessive nights, as foon as the candle was taken away, he and his Countess saw a luminous spectre, sometimes of an oval, fometimes of a triangular, form; that it always disappeared when light came into the room; that he had often ftruck at it, but could discover nothing folid. Gassandi, as a natural philosopher, endeavoured to account for it; fometimes attributing it to some defect of vision, or to some dampnels of the room; infinuating that perhaps it might be fent from Heaven to him, to give him a warning in due time of fomething that should happen. The spectre continued its visits all the time that he staid at Marseilles; and some years afterwards, on their return to Aix, the Countess d'Alais d'Alais confessed to her husband, that she played him this trick, by means of one of her women placed under the bed with a phial of phosphorus, with an intention to frighten him away from Marseilles, a place in which she very much disliked to live.

Gui Patin, who attended Gassendi as his physician in his last illness, writes thus to M. Spon: "I have just now lest Gassendi between "two Priests. Sie itur ad astra, where, great "Astronomer and Philosopher as he is, he "will know more in a quarter of an hour "than he ever could know here in the course of his whole life."

FATHER MABILLON.

Louis the Fourteenthwas desirous to see this celebrated Benedictin. Le Tellier, Archbishop of Rheims, presented him to his Majesty in these words: "Sire, I have the honour to present to "you the most learned man in your domi-"nious." Bossuet, who was present, added, "Sire, and the most modest."

An English Gentleman, wishing to consult M. Du Cange on some subject of antiquity, was referred by him to Mabillon. On applying to Mabillon, he defired him to confult M. Du Cange. Why, my good Father, he told me to "address myself to you."—"He is my Master, I affure you, Sir," replied the Benedictin, "If, however, you continue to honour me with your visits, I will communicate to you "the little that I know."

Clement XI. on hearing of Mabillon's death, wrote to the illustrious Congregation of St. Maur, to define that they would bury their deceased colleague in a place of distinguished sepulture; "for," added he, "all the men of learning who come to Paris will not fail to inquire where you have placed him—ubi po"fuistis eum."

Dom' Rouffel made an inscription for him. The eulogium it contains may be recommended to the notice of many persons who seem to make up in arrogance their inseriority of knowledge to this modest Benedictin,

Omnium hominum fibi conciliavit animos
Hominum m.tiffimus;
In ipfis etiam literariis discrepationibus
Nemini asper.
Nemini læsit, etiam læsus.
Scribentem incitabat veritas,

Certantem

Certantem moderabatur lenitas, Vincentem coronabat veritas, Coronatum ornabat humilitas.

Cœlestis gloriæ cupidus,
Mundanam sprevit.
Respexit mercedem
Quam dare solent homines.
Vani, vanum.
Nullam in claustro tenuit dignitatem,
Omnes meruit.
Cum literarum studiis
Virtutum studia conjunxit,
Ut alterno sædere.
Scientia pietatem
Pietas scientiam adjuvaret.

SANTEUIL.

Princes and great men are but too apt to degrade their own dignity, and to render the fituation of dependence more ungrateful and unpalatable than it is of necessity, by playing practical jokes upon those persons who are about them. The celebrated Latin Poet Santeuil died of one of these princely gambols. Some Spanish snuff was put into a glass of wine, by order of the Duchess of Bourbon, which he was obliged to drink, and he died a few days afterwards afterwards in the most horrid tortures, in confequence of it.

Santeuil, who was a quibbler, and un homme aux bons mots, died as he lived; for, on her Highness's (fon Altesse) fending one day to know how he did when he was in the agonies of death, on hearing the word Altesse, he turned his eyes up to Heaven, repeating "Tu solus" Altessimus," and died immediately.

Santeuil wrote some excellent Hymns * for the service of the Catholick Church, which are still in use. He used frequently to say, that though every one was expected to go to church,

* The conclusion of his Hymn to Holy Women is exquisite. He thus concludes his description of the Virtuous Woman:

Non illa luxu vestium, Non crine torto splenduit. Cultu nitens sed simplici Puris placebat moribus.

Se fub ferenis vultibus Austera virtus occulit. Timet videci, ne suum Dum piodit, amittat decus.

Pascenda cœlesti cibo, Sacris studebat literis, Templo siequens, sed sedula Redibat ad curam domûs. he should be excepted, as he could not prevent himself from hearing his own hymns sung there, perhaps with too much satisfaction for a pious man.

Santeuil, who had never taken Priest's orders. feated himself one day in a Confessional Chair that belonged to his Convent, and leaned over the elbow of it, as if in expectation of receiving a Penitent. A handsome woman approached, knelt down, and began to enumerate her frailties. Santeuil, who was pleafed with it at first, foon became tired of it, and by way of putting a stop to his Penitent, cried out, "Why, you " fimpleton, I am no Priest! why do you trou-"ble me with all this detail?"—"Oh, Sir," replied the woman, "I shall go immediately and " tell your Superior of your improper and fcan-"dalous conduct."--" Shall you fo, my charm-" ing Penitent?" replied Santeuil: "then I fhall go and tell your hufband of your's," exhibits a striking instance of the earliest designation of the human mind to a particular purfuit, and the sutility of an attempt to thwart and repress it. Pascal's father was a man of science.

PASCAL

fcience, and was occasionally visited by the great mathematicians of his country. Pascal, who was then quite a child, was present at their vifits, and heard their conversation, which chiefly turned upon science, and more particularly upon that which they professed. He was very attentive to what they faid, and conceived fuck a passion for mathematics, that he pressed his father very much to permit him to study them This the father refused, as thinking it better that his fon's early years should be given to the knowledge of the Greek and Latin languages and put out of his way all the books he migh happen to have that treated of mathematics Pascal (then eleven years of age), at his lessure hours, used to retire to an upper chamber in his father's house, where he employed himsel in tracing, with fand upon the floor, the figure of triangles, of parallelograms, of circles, &c without knowing the names of them. "Ther " he compared," fays his Biographer (Madam du Perrier, who was his fifter), "their fevera " relations and proportions; and by degree: " without the least affistance of any kind what " ever, came to conclude, that the exteric " angle of every triangle is equal to the tw " interior and opposite angles, and that th " three interior angles of every triangle as equal to two right-angles, which is the 32 " Propositio

" Proposition of the First Book of Euclid. This and the feveral intermediately necessary " Propositions he was able clearly to demon-" ftrate, making use of the terms rond and " barre, &c. instead of circle and line (for as yet 66 he was ignorant of the common appellations " of those lines), and grounding his reasoning " on definitions and axioms which himself had « verified. He was thus employed when his " father burst in upon him, who discovering " what he was about, and the progress and " refult of his exertions, remained for fome "time quite infenfible, equally furprized and " pleased, and ran to one of his intimate friends " to tell him what he had feen. He afterwards encouraged his fon in the pursuit of " his favourite study with such success, that at the age of fixteen young Pascal had com-" posed his celebrated Treatise upon Conic " Sections."

Pascal was perhaps one of the best men that ever lived; his time was bestowed on works of piety and utility, and his money was expended on those who had occasion for his affistance. His Provincial Letters will immortalize him as one of the finest writers that the French have ever possessed. One knows not which to admire most in them, his depth of learning, his strength strength of reasoning, the delicacy of his satire. or the purity of his intention. In his " Pensées," with an honesty perhaps only pardonable in a man of his known virtue and simplicity, he says, "I am asked, If I do not repent that I have written the Lettres Provinciales? I answer. that so far from repenting that I have writse ten them, I would, if I were to write them over again, make them still stronger. I am then asked, Why I have mentioned the " names of the Authors from whom I have " taken all the abominable positions which I have quoted in them? I aniwer, That if I were " in a town where there were twelve springs of water, and I was certain that one of them " had been poisoned, I should think myself obliged to advise the inhabitants not to get " their water at that fpring; and as what I faid " might be taken for a matter of mere imagiation, I should think myself obliged to tell " the name of the person who poisoned the fpring, rather than fuffer the inhabitants of " the town to be poisoned."

In speaking of Epigrams, with what goodness of heart, and with what bonhommie, he says,

"The Epigram of Martial on short-sighted for persons is good for nothing. It does not con-

"fole them, and it shews only the wit of the writer. All that makes only for the writer is good for nothing—ambittofa recidet ornamenta.—One should endeavour to please only those that possess sentiments of humanity and kindness, and not persons of a cruel and barbarous disposition."

Pascal, in the latter part of his life, retired to that illustrious seminary of science, learning, and piety, Port Royal. Many of the persons that composed it were men of learning and of rank, who thought it right to follow some trade or manufacture, and personn some manual operation for the good of their souls, as well as for that of their bodies; thinking with the celebrated Abbé du Rancé, the disciplinarian reformer of the samous Abbey of La Trappe, that manual labour was the first punishment inflicted upon sin, a proper exercise for the condition of a penitent, and a most powerful means of sanctification.

Pascal's employment was that of a maker of wooden shoes; this gave rise to the following witticism of Boileau: A Jesuit having one day asked Boileau with a sneer, whether his good friend Pascal was making shoes at Port Royal: "Je ne sçais pas s'il fait à present des souliers, mais

" je sçais bien qu'il vous a poussé un bonne botte;" was the satirist's reply.

Pascal had, in common with many other learned men, some weaknesses, upon which humanity will ever drop a tear. A book has been written upon the quackery of learned men, and in the opinion of the present learned and excellent Father of Medicine in this country (a Character as superior to frailty as to vice), an entertaining book might be made of the follies of learned men. His name most affuredly would never enter into the composition of it: but the work would at least console the ignorant and the foolish.

Pascal, like many excellent and studious men, seems to have had a horror of politics. "In a Republican Government, as that of Venice,

- "it would be a great prime?" for he "to at
- " it would be a great crime," fays he, " to attempt to introduce a King *, or to oppress
  - "the
- * Gui du Four de Pibrac, the celebrated Author of the Quatrains, seems to be of the same opinion:

Aime l'état tel que tu le vois être: S'il est Royal, aime la Royauté; S'il ne l'est point, s'il est Communauté, Aime-le aussi, quand Dieu t'y a fait naître.

Whate'er its Government, thy Country love: Thy lawful Monarch willingly obey;

"the liberty of any people to whom God has given it. In a Monarchical Government, it is not possible to violate the respect that is owing to the Sovereign, without a species of facrilege. Besides," adds this great man, a civil war, which is the general consequence of the alteration of a form of government, being one of the greatest crimes that can be committed against the happiness of mankind, it is impossible to speak against it with too much indignation." Pascal subjoins in a note with great simplicity, "I have as great a

And let the State thy ready homage prove, Should Few or Many bear the fovereign fway; Convinced that God's paternal care Has thought it fit to place thee there.

No one can suspect this great man of servility and passive obedience, when the following Quatrain, written by him, prevented his being made Chancelloi of France under Henry the Third:

Je hais ces mots de proffence abfolue, De ple n pouvoir, de propre mouvement; Aux faints decreis, ils ont promièrement Puis à nos Lore la pursance tollue.

These words of "power supreme" and "fovereign will," My mind with honest indignation fill;
For words like these have hart Religion's cause,
Destroy'd all reverence for her facied laws;
Have injur'd Gallia's Monarch's temperate sway,
And made his subjects as his slaves obey.

" dread

" dread of this crime as of murder and of rob" bing on the highway. There is nothing, I " am fure, that is more contrary to my nature

" than this crime, and to commit which I " should be less temptea.

"Those persons," says Segrais, "who write books for the public, should let their friends

" fee them who are men of judgment, and are " capable of correcting them before they ap" pear at that redoubtable tribunal. M. de

" Menage did fo, and that accounts for the " correctness of his works. M. de la Roche-

" foucault acted in the same way by his Me" moirs and Maxims. Why are Pascal's Pro" vincial Letters fo perfect? It is because they " were feen and reviewed by at least a dozen

" of the gentlemen of Port Royal, who were

" men of talents, and who had an exquisite

" taste in discovering what would please the " public."

Those persons who from folly or from carelessiness tell one friend what another friend says of him, would do well to consider this observation of the acute and amiable Pascal:

"All men naturally hate each other. I am certain, that if they were to know accurately
x 2
"what

"what they occasionally had said of one another, there would not be four persons in the world who could long preserve their friendship for each other."

This great man observes acutely, "that the longer we live in the world, the more diffimilitude of character we find in mankind, and are convinced that no two men are precisely alike." This reflection should indeed render us more indulgent to each other than we are, to the virtues as well as the vices of others that are unlike our own, and not suppose ourselves the models to which we are to refer every thing.

"See," fays Pascal, "the absurdity of mankind. Many men have believed in the Miracles of Vespasian, who have appeared to give no credit to those of Jesus Christ."

In his Provincial Letters, he fays: "This "letter is longer than any of the rest; but in"deed and in good truth I had not leisure "to make it shorter."

OMER TALON,

ATTORNEY GENERAL OF THE PARLIAMENT OF PARIS.

This intelligent and inflexible Magistrate having, in a speech which he made in the Parliament of Paris to Anne of Austria, during the minority of Louis the Fourteenth, touched gently upon the distresses of the common people of the kingdom of France, found himself treated with slight and coolness by her Majesty at the next audience he had of her. "This," says he, "was owing to the misrepresentation of the Ministers, and some of the vermin who frequent palaces."

Talon having on some occasion taken a part which pleased the Queen and the Court, Cardinal Mazarin sent for him, and, after paying him some compliments on his behaviour, offered him an Abbey for his brother. Talon very politely refused it, adding, that as his late conduct had nothing in view but the service of the King and the satisfaction of his own conscience, he should be extremely unhappy, if there was the least suspicion afforded to the world at large that he had acted from other motives. "I love," added this honest Frenchman,

man, "both the King and the Parliament, "without being under any apprehension that this apparent contradiction should do me any prejudice with mankind."

Mazarin fent for him another time, to request him to speak in the Parliament of Paris in favour of some Edicts of the King, which were to be presented by himself in person to be regulated by that Assembly. Talon replied, that he should do his duty—that the presence of the Sovereign on such occasions caused always trouble and discontent—that it was therefore the more necessary that he should exercise properly the functions of his office without fear and without partiality.

M. Talen's reasons for quitting public affairs were those which but too often have inspired men as honest and as well-intentioned as himself. "All resistance and contradiction," says he, "to the Governing Powers was inessectual and useless, who carried every point they wished to gain by violence and constraint. I was however," he adds, "very much astonished that many honest men, who wished well to the public peace, still attended the Parsiliament, in which they were certain that every thirg must be carried as it pleased the " Princes; so that in the situation in which " matters were, it would have been more for "their honour, that what was done should " have been done by the voices of a few per-" fons only, whose partiality might well have " been suspected, than by the majority of the " Parliament, who had not the power either " to do the good, or to prevent the evil, as "they wished. Nevertheless, the general ti-" midity was fo great, that many persons were " afraid of being suspected, if they did not " attend that Affembly; and the majority of "those who went there did not consider so " much what opinion they should give, as " how their persons should be secure, even " when they had betrayed their consciences, " and had voted on the fame fide with the " Princes."

David Hume fays, in his Effay upon Eloquence, that during the disputes of the Parliament of Paris in the time of the Fronde, there appeared many symptoms of antient eloquence. "The Avocat-General Talon," adds he, from De Retz, "in an oration, invoked on his knees the Spirit of St. Louis to look down with compassion on his divided and unhappy peomple, and to inspire them from Heaven with the love of concord and unanimity."

MOLÉ,

PRESIDENT OF THE PARLIAMENT OF PARIS.

DERETZ says, that no ancient Roman ever possessed the virtues of courage and of public spirit in a degree superior to this great Magistrate. In the time of the Fronde at Paris, a man presented a dagger to his breast, threatening him with instant death if he would not consent to some decree proposed in the Parliament, which M. Molé thought prejudicial to his country. "Know, my friend," said he, looking sternly at him, "that the distance is infinite from the dagger of an affassin to the "heart of an honest man."

FOUCQUET,

SURINTENDANT OF THE FINANCES OF FRANCE.

For the honour of letters, Pelisson and the good La Fontaine remained faithful to the Surintendant during his disgrace. Pelisson sent petitions to Louis XIV. in his favour, and La Fontaine wrote verses in commisseration of his hard fate, in a style of the highest pathos, a style totally dissimilar from his usual manner. Mademoiselle demoifelle Deshoulieres, the celebrated Poetess, whom he had patronised, contrived to send him intelligence even into that inaccessible fortress the Bastille. The Great, who had condescended to partake of his favours whilst he was in power, completely forsook him when he had no longer any thing to give them; and this after he had so far attended even to their vices, as at all the entertainments he gave to put money under their plates to enable them to pay their losses at play.

Foucquet was confined many years in the fortress of Pignerol, where he composed some devotional Treatises. It is not known whether he was ever permitted to return to Paris. St. Simon, in his Memoirs, gives a very curious account of the meeting between him and his fellow-prisoner the Duke of Lausun at Pignerol.

PELISSON.

This elegant Writer contrived to be fent to the Bastille, to give his patron M. Foucquet intelligence of what had been done respecting his trial. Whilft he was confined there, he wrote a Poem called, Eurymedon; " per-"fuaded," "fuaded," fays his Biographer, "that by a "great effort of application of mind to a par-"ticular fubject, he should alone be able to "fosten the rigours of confinement." He wrote the following lines on the walls of his cell:

Doubles grilles à gros cloux,
Triples porte, f.rts verroux,
Aux ames vraiment mechantes
Vous representez l'enser,
Mais aux ames innocentes
Vous n'êtes que du bois, des pierres, et du ser.

Voltaire fays, there are no compositions in the French language, which in style and manner more resemble the orations of Tully, than the remonstrances of Pelisson to Louis XIV. in favour of M. Foucquet.

M. DUMOULIN.

"I LEAVE behind me," fays this excellent Physician on his death-bed, "two most power-"ful remedies, diet and exercise,"

Dryden has faid,

God never made his work for man to mend.

This may be true of man as he came out of the hands of his great Creator; but he has fince, fince, by his vices and his follies, debased his frame, and made it necessary for him often to apply for the affistance of those who have made the diseases of the body their particular study. Yet with what caution he should apply, the learned Frederic Hossiman will warn him, who wrote a book entitled "Medici Morborum" Causa: "Physicians the Causes of Diseases".

M. Dumoulin had this inscription engraved over the Fountain of the Mineral Waters of Bourbon:

Auriferas dives jactet Poctolus arenas, Ditior hæc volvit mortalibus unda salutem.

Unenvied now, Pactolus, roll along Thy golden fands, immortaliz'd in fong; Our favour'd ftreams in richer torrents flow, And health's great bleffing on mankind beftow.

"The lives of many hysterical and hypochondriacal patients," says the ingenious Dr. Feiriar, of Manchester, in his excellent Treatise on the Conversion of Diseases, have been at once shortened and embittered by the thoughtless encouragement given by some practitioners to the use of spirituous liquors. I have seening strength melan-choly instances in which habits of dram-drinking have been thus acquired, under the sanction of the medical attendant, by persons not only temperate but delicate in their moral habits. In this manner hysterical diseases of no great moment are converted to schirrus of the liver and dropsy, to apoplexy, palsy, and other diseases; sed magrania set tightless."

The three Greek words lately inscribed by the learned and excellent Dr. Harrington on the Pump-room at Bath have a peculiar and specific propriety. They are simple and elegant in themselves, are taken from a great lyric Poet, and allude to the celebrated system of an ancient Philosopher, that water is the principle of all things; and they bear a specific allusion to the properties of the Bath waters, which are extremely salutary to those who have indulged in wine and fermented liquors.

REGNARD.

THE life of this celebrated French Comic Poet appears to have been a life of real romance. He was born at Paris in 1647. His great passion throughout life was that of travelling. In returning from Italy to France by an English merchant ship, he was taken prisoner by an Algerine vessel, and carried with the rest of the crew to Atgiers, where he was sold for a slave to one of the principal persons of that city. Regnard, being a very good cook, was in consequence of his knowledge in that very useful art taken notice of by his master, and treated with great lenity. He was however however detected in an intrigue* with one of the women of his mafter's feraglio, and was fentenced either to be impaled, or to turn Mahometan. The French Conful at Algiers, who had just received a very considerable sum of money to purchase Regnard's liberty, made use of it to procure him both that and his life. Regnard, again a free man, returned to France: having however the gout de la vie vagabonde (as he calls it) he travelled into Flanders and Holland, and from thence to Denmark; the Sovereign of which country advising him to visit Lapland, he and two other Frenchmen (whom he chanced to meet at Copenhagen) went together into Lapland as far as the extremity of the Gulph of Borneo, and extended their travels even to the Frozen Sea. Stopping here, as they could not possibly go any farther, Regnard had these lines engraved upon a stone on a mountain near that immense repository of ice:

Gallia nos genuit, vidit nos Africa, Gangem Hausimus, Europamque oculis lustravimus omnem. Casibus et variis acti terrâque marique Sistimus hic tandem quà nobis defent orbis.

In Gallia born, by scorching Afric view'd, And bath'd in Ganges' consecrated slood,

* The principal circumstances of this intrigue Regnard has worked up into a Novel called "La Provençale."

We've feen whate'er of nature and of art,
To wond'ring eyes, all Europe can impart;
By Fate's kind power enabled to withft.ind
The various perils of the fea and land.
Here then we flop, here fix our last retreat;
Where the world closes on our wandering feet.

No one feems to have felt more fenfibly, or to have described more forcibly, the miseries of an idle and undefignated life than M. Regnard. In some port in which he was becalmed, he thus expresses his fensations on the subject: -" The whole time in which we were be-" calmed," fays he, " was not entirely loft to " me. Every day I went to the top of some " high and pointed rock, from which the view " of the sea, and of the precipices that sur-" rounded it, corresponded perfectly well with " my meditations. In these conversations with " myself, I laid open my own self to myself. " I endeavoured to discover, in the very inmost " recesses of my heart, the sentiments that had " been before concealed from me; and I faw " them as they were in reality, and without " disguise. I threw my eyes back upon the " agitations of my past life, where I saw designs " without execution, and enterprizes without " fuccess. I considered my present state of " life, my continual change of place, my con-" stant though useless travels, and the continual " emotions emotions with which I was haraffed. I " recognized myself but too well under every one " of these situations, into which mere caprice, 66 mere fickleness had directed me, without " being able to allow even my vanity and felf-" love to tell me any thing in my favour. I "then began to make a just estimate of what " I had been doing; I became but too sensible " how contrary all that I had ever done was " to the proper business of life, which consists " in quiet and in tranquillity; and that that " happy state of mind is only to be found in " fome agreeable profession or business, which " arrefts the human mind in the same manner " as an anchor stops a vessel in the midst of a " ftorn.

"There is perhaps," adds M. Regnard, nothing more difficult in human life than the choice of a profession. Hence it happens, that there are so many persons who live without any profession, and who exist in a perpetual and disgraceful indolence, not spending their time in the way in which they would wish to spend it, but as they have been accustomed to spend it, whether from their apprehension of difficulty, from their love of idleness, or their dislike to labour. The life of these miserable persons is a state of perpetual agitation; and if, at an advanced period

" period of life, they seemed to be fixed to any "thing, it is not the diflike to motion, but their " inability to move, that is the cause of it. "These persons are continually accusing For-"tune of having treated them ill: they are " continually complaining of the badness of " the times, and the wickedness of the age. "They are continually flying from one place to another, and are never pleased with any. 66 In winter they are too cold, in fummer they " are too hot. If they make a voyage by fea, "they are foon tired of the inconveniences " of being on ship-board; if they travel by " land, they are incommoded by dust, by bad "horses, by bad inns. If they go to any " place, they are foon tired of it, and go to " fome other place. Thus flying ever from "themselves, they always carry with them "their own inconstancy of mind, yet appear " to forget that the cause of their wretchedness is within themselves, and do not remember " what Horace has long ago told them,

----Patriæ quis exul
Se quoque fugit ?

thus exquisitely translated by Mr. Hastings,

What vagrant from his native land E'er left himself behind?

One of the most striking pictures that was ever made of the wretchedness and misery of an idle and unappropriated life is to be met with in Lord Clarendon's Dialogue on the Want of Respect due to Old Age, in the volume of his Tracts, where he gives the following melancholy account of one of his country neighbours:

"When I visited this Gentleman in the " morning I always found him in his bed, and when I came in the afternoon he was afleep, " and to most men besides myself was denied, " but was very willing to be called when I " came, and always received me with cheerful-" nefs. Once walking with him, I doubted " he was melancholy, and by fpending his " time fo much in his bed, and fo much alone, "that there was fomething which troubled "him, otherwise that it could not be that a " man upon whom God had poured down fo " many bleffings, in the comfort of fo excellent " a wife, who had brought him fo many hope-" ful children, and in the poffession of so " ample an estate, should appear in the course " of his life, and in the spending of his time, " to be so little contented as he appeared to be. To which, with a countenance a little " more erect and cheerful, he answered, that " he thought himself the most happy man " alive VOL. IV. Y

" alive in a wife, who was all the comfort he " could have in this world; that he was at fo " much ease in his fortune, that he could not wish it greater. But he faid, he would deal tree with me, and tell me, if he were me-" car oly (which he suspected himself of), what was the true cause of it: that he had " fomewhat he knew not what to do with; his " time. he knew not how to spend, which was " the reason he loved his bed so much, and " flept at other times, which, he faid, he found " did already do him no good in his health. " I told him, that I had observed in his closet " many books finely bound, which I prefumed " he might find good divertisement in reading. "To which he replied, that they were all " French remances, which he had read enough, " and never found himself the better, for want " of fome kind of learning, which was neces-" fary to make those observations which might " arise even from these book, useful; and he " confessed that he could not read any book " for half an hour together without fleeping. " All which, he faid with a deep figh, was to " be imputed to the ill-education he had had, " which made him fpend that time in which " he ought to have laid up a stock of know-" ledge, which would have made his age de-" lectable to him, in dancing and fuch other " trifles, er trifles, the skill and perfection wherein men " grow weary of as foon as they are grown perse fect men, and yet when it is too late to " cultivate their minds with nobler studies, which they are unapt then to enter upon, " because they see what progress much younger " men have made in those studies before they so begin, and fo chuse rather to flatter them-" felves in their ignorance." In the course of the narration, it appears that the father of this unhappy man had, from a foolish notion that his fon might learn fome vices at the English Universities, sent him to one of the French Academies, where, as himself told Lord Clarendon, "Trust me, neighbour," said he, "all " that is learned in these Academies is riding, " fencing, and dancing, besides some wicked-" nesses they do not profess to teach, and yet " are too easily learnt, and with difficulty " avoided, fuch as I hope our Univerfities are " not infected with. It is true," added he, " they have men there who teach Arithmetic, " which they call philosophy; and the art of " fortification, which they call mathematics;— " but what learning they have there I might « eafily imagine, when he affured me, that in " three years which he spent in the Academy, " he never faw a Latin book, nor any Master "that taught any thing there, who would not ¥ 2 66 have

"have taken it very ill to have been suspectdefined to speak or understand Latin. Oh, neighbour," continued he, "I do promise you, that none of my children shall have that breeding, lest when they come to my age, they know not better to spend their time than I do." Lord Clarendon adds, "that this unhappy Gentleman's melancholy daily increased with the agony of his thoughts, till he contracted those diseases which carried him off at the age of thirty-six years."

SENECAI.

5

This celebrated French Epigrammatist was valet-de-chambre to Maria Theresa, the Queen of Louis XIV. In early life he had been long wavering with respect to the choice of the profession he was to follow; he however, at last, very dutifully, and very wisely, deferred to the opinion of his Father *, who chose for him the pro-

* On the subject of the choice of a profession, Dr. Johnfon, with his usual fagacity of remark, says, "I have ever "thought those happy that have been fixed from the first dawn of thought to some state of life, by the choice of one whose authority may preclude caprice, and whose "influence may prejudice them in favour of his opinion.
"The

profession of the Law. Whilst he remained in his state of uncertainty he wrote the following lines; to which, from the peculiar neatness and selicity of expression contained in them, it would be difficult to do justice in a translation.

L'IRRESOLU.

Pendant que Luc delibere
Sur ce qu'il doit devenir,
Et s'il est bon de se faire,
Homme d'eglise ou d'affaire,
Avocat ou mousquetaire,
Plus vîte qu'un souvenir,
Le temps a l'aile legere
Part, pour ne plus revenir,
Ses beaux jours vont s'embrunir,
Et la vieillesse s'avance.

&quot;The general precept of confulting the genius is of little

&quot; use, unless we can tell how that genius is to be known.

&quot;If it is only to be discovered by experiment, life will be

&quot; loft before the refolution can be fixed. If any other in-

&quot;dications are to be found, they may, perhaps, be eafily

&quot; discerned. At least, if to miscarry in an attempt be a

&quot; proof of having mistaken the direction of the genius,

&quot; men appear not less frequently mustaken with regard to

&quot;themselves than to others; and therefore no one has

&quot; much reason to complain, that his life was planned out

<sup>66</sup> by his friends, or to be confident that he should have

&quot; had either more honour or more happiness, by being

&quot; abandoned to the choice of his own fancy."

Auparavant qu'il commence
Il seroit temps de finir.
Flottant dans l'incertitude,
Luc reste insensiblement,
Inutile egalement
Pour la guerre, pour l'étude,
Le monde & la solitude.
Quant à moi, je prévois bien
Que cherchant trop à se connoître,
Ce qu'il peut ce qu'il veut être,
Ensin Luc ne sera vien.

Seneçai used to call cheerfulness of temper " la beaume de la vie." He wrote some Memoirs of Cardinal de Retz, which are now procured with difficulty, and which differ in some respects from those published by his Eminence.

LAINEZ

was an excellent Scholar and an elegant Poet. He divided his time between the pleasures of the table and his studies. Some one having expressed his surprize at seeing him in the King's Library at Paris early one morning, after he had spent the preceding night jovially with him, he replied, in imitation of two well-known lines of Martial.

6

Regnat note calix, volvuntur biblia mane. Cum Phæbo Bacchus dividit imperium. All night I drink, and fludy hard all day, Bacchus with Phœbus holds divided fway.

He said of those elegant little French volumes called the "Ana+," that they were the Flanc manger of Literature.

RACINE.

VOLTAIRE used to say, that nothing could be so easy as to make a commentary upon the writings of this elegant writer, for that the author would have nothing to do but to put under every passage, "fine, admirable, excel-"lent, charming, &c." The French scholars universally prefer his verses to those of any Poet in their unmusical language. Racine was by no means a man of good temper, and was extremely rough and impetuous in conversa-

* A felection has been lately made from these little volumes by a Fellow of New College, Oxford, whose taste in making it shews him to be the worthy eleve of Dr. Joseph Waiton. See "Selections from the French Ana., " tion. He had once a long and violent difpute with his friend Boileau;—when it was over, Boileau, with great fang froid, faid to him, "Had you any real intention just now of mak-"ing me uneafy?"—"God forbid, my good old "friend," replied Racine.—"Well then," said Boileau, "you have done what you did not "intend to do, for indeed you have made me "uneafy."
12mo."

Yet Racine had so great an attachment to Boileau, that when the satyrist visited him on his death-bed, he said, throwing his arms around him, "I look upon it as a great happiness that "I die before you."

Racine read extremely well. Louis the Fourteenth fent to him one day when he was indisposed, to read something to him. Racine proposed the celebrated Translation of Plutarch's Lives by Amyot. "The language is "antiquated," said the King.—"Well, then, "Sir," replied Racine, "I can correct that "defect, I will put him into modern French." This Racine did, and pleased his Sovereign extremely.

Racine, foon after his appointment to the place of Historiographer to Louis the Fourteenth, teenth, requested an audience-"Sire," said he, " an Historian ought not to flatter; he is bound " to represent his hero exactly as he is. He " ought indeed to pass over nothing. In what " way does your Majesty choose that I should " fpeak of your gallantries?"-" Pass them " over," replied the King, coolly. "But, alas! " Sire," replied Racine, with great manliness, " what I omit, the reader will supply." Louis replied, "Pass them over, I tell you."-Racine added, "As there are many incredible things, " Sire, in the life of your Majesty, the fincerity " with which I should avow the weaknesses of " my Hero to my reader, will perfuade him " that I regard the truth, and this regard to " truth will, in his mind, be a paffport for my " history." Louis replied, "I am not yet de-" cided in my opinion what you ought to do: " All that I can tell you at present is, to pass " over my intrigues," Racine used to say of Lucan, that he was Virgil drunk, "Virgile ivre." There are still, however, much fire and spirit in his inebriety—particular passages are exquisize. Corneille preferred Lucan to Virgil.

Racine wrote feveral notes on the margin of his editions of the Greek Pramatic Poets.

They

They are preferred in the King's Library at Paris.

CHARPENTIER.

网络艾尔斯特里米达沙斯

THE Charpentieriana feems to have very good reasons for supposing the author of that formerly much read book "The Turkish Spy," to have been an Italian of the name of Marana, who resided at Paris.

FATHER BOUSSIERES.

ONE of the most singular dedications, perhaps, in the world, is that of this learned Monk's "Parterre Historique" to the Virgin Mary, whom he thus addresses:

" MATRI DEI REGINÆ MUNDI."

- " To the Mother of God and the Queen of "the World,
- " After fuch august titles, O great Queen,
- "I am almost ashamed to offer to you such a trifle as this book is; but I have so strong a
- " defire to let mankind know that I owe you
- " every thing, that I am tempted to do it,
- without paying that respect which I ought "to do to your greatness; though indeed, to fpeak truly, I diminish not a tittle of your greatness, when I have recourse to your kindness. Permit me then, O great Queen, again to renew the offering which I make to you in consecrating to you the first-fruits of my stucies, hoping that this work of mine (however inconsiderable in itself) will be in some degree esteemed by the world on account of your adorable name, which it bears increbed on the first page of it, and that the Author chose expressly to procure for it safety and protection."

" La Parterre Historique," Lyon, 1672,

SEGRAIS,

the Author of the celebrated Romance of "Zaide," who lived in the reign of Louis the Thirteenth of France, and in the early part of that of Louis the Fourteenth, fays, "I find "myfelf much more happy in France under its "prefent Government, than a Dutchman is "with all his pretended liberty. He pays fo many taxes, that supposing he had six thou- fand livres a-year, he must pay two thousand cut of them; whilst I, by paying sometimes for the register of my coat of arms, and occa-

" fionally fome other small sum for the neces. fities of the State, live in peace and fecurity. 66 A Dutchman has no idea how any man can " bear a Government so despotic as that of " France. But with us, at prefent, individuals are more happy than they were before, when * the least bit of a Gentleman would play the fe petty tyrant upon his estate. In our whole " Province of Normandy we had only two or "three Noblemen who behaved themselves " like brave and honest Gentlemen. The rest of them, who used to tyrannize over their " Farmers, and beat them, are all gone to the " Devil. Was it not a shameful and a scan-" dalous thing, that a miserable Counsellor of " Parliament had it in his power to make " every-body within twelve miles afraid of " him!"

"Cardinal de Retz," says Segrais, "told as a truth something of which I knew positively the contrary. To avoid mentioning that his Eminence had told a lie, I observed to him, that he ought to do as the late Madame de Montpensier did, who used to say, that she never told an untruth, but that she made use of her imagination to supply the defect of her memory."

When I was young," fays Segrais in his Memoirs, "I was fond of making verses, and " of reading them in differently to all forts of " persons. But I perceived, that when M. "Scarron, who was however my intimate friend, " took out his portefeuille, and read me fome " of his verses, he bored me excessively, al-"though his verses were very good. I then " began to reflect, that as my verses were not e near fo good as his, I must in a greater degree " bore my friends (who most probably did not " like poetry as well as I did); and I then laid " myself down a resolution, never to read my verses except to those who asked me, and " even then to take care that I did not give " them too many of them."

Segrais, speaking of the disturbances at Paris in his time called La Fronde, says, "The party "that opposed the Court had no real reason "for doing so. It was to them an agreeable amusement, in which there was a good deal of laughing, and in which every thing was made fun of in doggerel verses." Would to Heaven that the late Frondeurs in that Country had been as harmless and as pleafant!

LULLI.

This great Musician was one day reproached with setting nothing to music but the languid verses of Quinault. He ran immediately to his harpsichord, and after having for a few minutes run over the keys in a most violent manner, and with great violence of gesture, sang from Racine's tragedy of "Iphigenie" the following terrific lines:

Un Prétre environné d'une foule cruelle Portera sur ma fille, une main criminelle Dechirer a son sein, et d'un œil curieux Dans son cœur palpitant consultera les Dieux. What, shall a Priest with sacred sury wild Extend his juthless hands upon my child! And whilst with stupid cruelty prosound The lovely victim the vile hard surround, Pierce her soft bosom, and with curious eye The suture in her quivering heart descry?

Lulli, thinking himself dying, sent for his Confessor, who would not give him absolution unless he burnt the last Opera he had composed, and which was in manuscript. Lulli disputed for some time, but all in vain; at last he threw it into the fire before the Priess's face, and received absolution. On his getting better, the Prince of Condé came to see him, and told him what a simpleton he had been to destroy one of his finest compositions. "Do not condemn me, Sir, unheard," replied the Musician to the Prince, "I knew very well what I was about: I have another copy." Lulli died at last of a wound which he had given himself in his foot, by beating time with too much violence with his cane. Agitated by the extremest remorse for the free life which he had led, he ordered himself to be placed upon ashes, and a rope to be put about his neck, and with tears in his eyes expired, chanting from the "Prosa Ecclesiastica" of the Romish Church, "Oh "wretched sinner, you must die!"

When Cardinal d'Estrées was at Rome, he praised Corelli's Sonatas very much before that exquisite Author. "Sir," replied Corelli, "if "they ha 'e any merit, it is because I have stu-"died Lulli." Handel himself has imitated Lulli in many of his Overtures.

M. ARNAULD D'ANDILLY.

This learned and pious head of the illustrious family that bears his name, was intended by Anne of Austria for a very confiderable employment ployment at her Court, which he refused, and retired to the celebrated seminary of learning and of piety near Paris, so well known by the name of Port Royal des Champs. As by the rules of that venerable Society every member of it was obliged to have some manual employment, Arnauld pursued that of gardening. He sent every year a present of sruits which he had cultivated himself to Anne of Austria: Cardinal Mazarin used to call them "les fruits bênits." He died at Port Royal at the age of eighty-four years. He is thus described by a person who knew him at the latter part of his life:

"His fparkling eyes, his firm and quick flep, his voice of thunder, his body upright and vigorous, his gray hairs that so well contrasted with the ruddiness of his cheeks, his grace in mounting and in sitting his horse, his strength of memory, the readiness of his wit, the force of his hand both to hold his pen and to prune his trees, insure him a kind of immortality amongst the Society to which he belongs."

M. Arnauld translated the History of the Jews from the Greek of Josephus; the Lives of the Saints and Fathers of the Desert, compiled piled from the Fathers of the Church; fome books upon Gardening, and fome facred Poems, which he calls "Œuvres Chrétiennes." These Poems were lately presented to a Lady, between whom and this virtuous Nobleman a parallel might be very fairly drawn. The following lines accompanied them:

What! "Euvres Christiennes" to B______fend? What, teach ev'n pious excellence to mend? No; but to shew her how in Arnauld's lines Her saint-like life in his reslected shines.

"M. Arnauld D'Andilly is a man," fays Balzac, "who, possessing the moral as well as the "Christian virtues, was neither vain of the first, "nor ashamed of the last."

It was one day observed to M. Arnauld, how wonderful it was that his brother's book, the celebrated "Livre de la Frequente Communion," though written by a young man who had just finished his studies, and who had not lived in the great world, should have been written with such elegance and politeness. He replied, "that "there was no ground for astonishment, for that his brother merely spoke the language "of his family."

M. D'Arnauld went to Versailles to return Louis XIV. his thanks for appointing his fon yor. iv. Z. M. de

238

M. de Pomponne Secretary of State. Louis very obligingly told him, "that he was well " rewarded for what he had done for M. de " Pomponne, by the applauses that were uni-" verfally given to the choice he had made of " him for that employment;" and after having paid M. Arnauld fome compliments upon his virtues and his learning, he faid to him with a finile, "Yet, Sir, I cannot help thinking but " that you have a fin upon your confcience of " which you have not repented."

"Your Majesty," replied M. Arnauld, "will, " I hope, tell me what it is, that I may attempt " to divest myself of it, either by correcting it " or by doing penance for it."—" That, Sir," added the polite Monarch, " is to have told " the world in your fine Preface to Josephus, " that you translated that author at the age of * eighty. For furely you must be a little proud " to see yourself at that age still capable of pro-"ducing a work fo excellent and fo highly " efteemed."

M. Arnauld wrote likewise the Memoirs of his own Life, which are excellent.

[ 339 ]

ARNAULD, BISHOP OF ANGERS.

In feems as if all who bore this illustrious name were defigned to be eminent for fome excellent quality or other; for learning, for bravery, for virtue, or for piety. The Bishop of Angers, as his Nephew tells us in his Memoirs, was never once out of his diocese * after the care of it was committed to his charge. His delicacy about his epifcoral duties was fo great, that being one day at Saumur within his-diocese, where Louis the Fourteenth was with his Court. and as he was walking with some other Bishops. hearing a foldier fay, "What, shall we never fee " any thing but Bishops here?" he felt himself much mortified, as if it could possibly have regarded himself. The Bishop was so unnecesfarily scrupulous, that passing a river in a boat, where one of the boatmen fell into the water through drunkenness, and was drowned, after having fent fome money to the widow, he often made a pilgrimage on foot to an hermitage at fome distance from his place of residence to pray for the foul of the boatman.

* This may be very commendable in a Catholic Bishop. In England, our Prelates being Peers as well as Bishops, their attendance in Parliament becomes a part of their duty.

ABBÉ ARNAULD

was the fon of M. Arnauld D'Andilly, and wrote some very entertaining Memoirs of his Life. "My mother," fays he, in one part of them, "was brought up in England, whilft " her father, M. de la Boderie, was Ambas-" fador from the Court of France to James " the First. She has often told me, that at " one of the combats between bull-dogs and " lions, in London (a fight very common at " that time in England) at which the King " and his Court were present, one of the Maids " of Honour to the Queen was attended by " a young man of fashion who was much " attached to her, and to whom she shewed " very little kindness. The Lady, either to " prove the strength of his passion, or perhaps, " as the Abbé says, to get rid of him, dropped sone of her gloves upon the stage, and turning " to the Gentleman, affected to appear ex-"tremely concerned at her loss. He well " knew what this meant, and coming down " very coolly from his feat, walked upon the " ftage with his fword drawn, and his left arm " wrapped up in his cloak. He then picked " up the glove, which had exposed him to " fuch imminent danger. By good luck the " lion "ion was too much engaged on the opposite fide of the stage with the bull-dogs to take notice of him. He next retired to his seat with the same coolness with which he had quitted it, when turning to the Lady, and giving her a very gentle tap on the cheek with the glove, Here, Madam, is your glove!

Indeed you do not deserve to have a man klike myself attached to you. From that time he took no further notice of her. His behaviour was the admiration of the whole

Court; her's was the shame and the con tempt."

ANTHONY ARNAULD,

BOILEAU calls him

Les plus sçavant mortel que ait jamais écrit, the most learned man that ever wrote; and, indeed, when one considers the number and quality of his writings, we shall have less scruple to admit the Satirist's eulogy upon him *.

* His works confift of upwards of one hundred volumes, on Logic, Grammar, Metaphysics, and Controversial Divinity.

Madame de Guimené had written to hun on the education of her only fon with great maternal folicitude. After answering her letter with some detail, he adds, "Permit me to " affure you, Madam, that it is merely from " the fuggestion of the Devil that you affect " to fear, that in the attempt to render your " fon a man of piety, his mind may become " confined and prejudiced, and that being " well with God he may be ill with the world. "On the contrary, I can affure you, that if " he is placed under the direction of proper " masters, his understanding and his courage " will be confiderably enlarged by his piety, " because there is nothing in the world so " truly grand as the Christian philosophy, nor " any person so noble-minded as a true Chris-"tian*. Particular care will be taken to " render him polished, civil, and well-bred, " at the same time that he is taught the proper " use of all these qualities, and to employ them " rather for the service of God than for the " vanity of the world ."

* " A Christian is the noblest style of man."

Dr. Young.

† "Every virtue enjoined by Christianity as a virtue, is recommended by politeness as an accomplishment. Gentleness, humility, deference, affability, and a reaminess to affist and serve on all occasions, are as ne-

[ 343 ]

MARSHAL DE NAVAILLES.

Ar the battle of Senef the Prince of Condéfent word to M. de Navailles to be ready to engage the enemy. The messenger found him hearing mass: at which the Prince, being enraged, muttered something in abuse of overpious persons. But M. de Navailles, having personned wonders during the engagement, said after it to the Prince, "Your Highness, "I fancy, sees now that those who pray to "God behave as well in a battle as their neightbours."

ST. EVREMOND

CONTRACTOR LA PERSONAL PROPERTY.

was Captain of the Guards to the great Prince of Condé. That Prince had the malignant humour of amusing himself with the soibles of persons of his acquaintance. St. Evremond wrote a Comedy, in which there was a character fo much like that of the Prince, that he saw his own soible depicted in it, and was so much displeased with the author, that he took his regiment from him. A model of persect narration is to be found in the History of La Bussiere in the St. Evremoniana.

&quot;ceffary in the composition of a true Christian, as in that of a well-bied man. Passion, moroseness, peevishness, and supercilious self-sufficiency, are equally repugnant to the characters of both, who differ in this only,—that the true Christian really is what the well-bred man presented to be, and would still be better bied if he was."—Mr. Soame Jenyns's Works, vol. iv. p. 198.

CARDINAL D'ESTE.

"In the dispute between this magnificent Prince of the Roman Church and the Amirante of Castile, Viceroy of Naples, on the latter's refusing to pay a certain mark of respect to the Cardinal in the streets of Rome; the Italians said of the bravery which the French that were at Rome exhibited in a skirmish between them and the Spaniards upon this trisling occasion, Do we not see that the French go to death as if they were certain of rising again the next

44 day ?**

Memoires D'ARNAULD.

DOM' NOEL D'ARGONNE.

This Carthusian Monk, of Gallion in Normandy, seems the only one of his venerable fraternity who has ever written upon subjects of Belies Lettres. The first two volumes of that learned and agreeable Miscellany "Les" Melanges de la Literature," which go under the name of Vigneuil de Merville, were compiled by him. The third volume was put together by the Abbé Banier, perhaps from the papers of the elegant Carthusian, who appears to have lived very much in the world. He occasionally speaks of his travels to Rome; and his observations seem replete with that knowledge and discrimination of character which a secluded life can never afford.

"The Painters," fays he, in the second volumes of his Melanges, "who are enraptured with their art, take every apportunity of ketching any fine heads they happen to meet with, particularly when they have something extraordinary about them. An humble imitator of those Artists, I make pictures of those persons in whom I perceive any thing remarkable. Mr. M. N. is now under my pencil. He is a man of quality, sensible, 66 handsome, and genteel. He is extremely es pleasant in society, but knows not what it 66 is to love, or to have a real regard for any " one. He is of opinion, that the heart is given us merely to purify the blood, to fet it " in motion, and to render it perfect, and not " to receive any impressions of tenderness or " of attachment to mankind. He looks upon "this principal part of ourselves as a simple " machine, and nearly as the principal pump " of Paris, which ferves merely to raise the " water of the Seine, and to diffribute it "through the city. Mr. M. N. pays vifits, " and is visited in his turn: he is polite to every one. Every person who meets him 66 is always glad to fee him, and when he quits 66 him, it is always with some degree of regret. "His understanding turns itself as he pleases, and he accommodates himself to the talents. " and the turn of mind, and the capacity of " every one who comes near him. He is a "Divine with Divines, a Philosopher with " Philosophers, a Politician with Politicians, 46 a man of frolick with those who have that "turn of mind. In short, prepared for any "thing, he is the man of every person, and " still the man of no one. He forgets you as " foon as your back is turned, and never thinks " but of pleasing those who are immediately " before

347

" before him. He passes imperceptibly from one scene to another, and from one character to another. He is always himself, and yet he is never himself. He takes time as it comes. The day of yesterday remains not in his memory, and he never by care and by foresight anticipates that of to-morrow."

Dom' Noel wrote upon "Education," or, the "History of M. de Monçade," accompanied with some maxims and Reslections. Rousseau appears to have read this work, and to have made some use of it in his "Emile." Dom' Noel's Treatise "Sur la" Lecture des Peres de l'Eglise," or on the manner in which to "Links Hould be read, was a book much esteemed in the Catholic Church of France.

SORBIERE

translated Hobbes's famous political Work "Leviathan" into French. In his Preface he draws a parallel between his Author and Machiavel. "The reasonings of Machiavel," says he, "proceed from a cruel and a savage mind; those of Hobbes flow from a disposition good, "tender, and benevolent. Yet after all," adds

he, "who will become a skilful politician by reading Hobbes? All that he says, to speak

reading an impossible

reading Hobbes? All that he says, to speak fion. Business and not declamation, and fill less the empty imaginations of a learned reading man in his study, make politicians. Più vale, fays Boccalini, un' oncia da fatto che mille di ragione. Lasciamo discorsi, poniamo il negozio in prattica.'

BAYLE.

This learned and acute writer was no Mathematician. According to Le Clerc, he said, that he never could be brought to understand the demonstration of the first proposition of Euclid*. The same defect of mind seems to have followed him in every thing which he did. He doubts and does not prove any thing, and deserves well what was once said of him,

Dr. Free used to say, that the proper definition of man was, a being who could prove the three angles of a triangle to be equal to two right ones.

Quintilian says of Geometry, "Cum Geometria divisa ste in numeros & formas numeros um quidem. Notitia non cratori modo sed cuicunque primis saltem literis crudita necessaria est."

that he was the Attorney-General of the Philofophers, that he merely stated their different arguments, but gave no opinion on them.

He said once to Father Tournemine, "I am only 'cloud-compelling Jove.' My ta"lent consists in forming doubts; but to myself they are only doubts." It is unfortunate for the generality of his readers that they are really doubts to them; they do not see so clear as himself, who

Sub pedibus vidit nubes et sidera.

Bayle died, as he lived, in obscurity, and with great tranquillity of mind. His will was disputed in France (from which country he had fled to avoid persecution), and the Parliament of Thoulouse determined it to be valid; giving as a reason, that a man who had enlightened mankind as Bayle had done, should be considered as belonging to no particular country, but as a Citizen of the Universe*.

* In the ancien regime of France, the state of a man of letters was more considered than in any other country. The Parliament of Paris decreed, in the case of the profits arising from Catilina, a Tragedy of Crebillon, that in no case whatever the manuscripts of an author were seizable, nor the profits accruing to him from any of his literary performances liable to be taken in execution for any debts that he might have contracted.

JEAN D'ALE L

This fervant of the Jesuits College at Paris. called that of Clermon, having stolen some pewter plates belonging to that Society, was taken up for the robbery, and examined by the Parliament of Paris. He faid in his defence. that he most assuredly had when the plates from the College, but that he had not folen them, having acted merely in conformity to a maxim of a Father of their Order, Father Bauny, and who, in his "Case of Conscience." 'article "Servants," fays, "That fervants who " are not contented with their wages, may se augment them by getting into their hands as much property belonging to their mafters, as " they in their consciences think adequate to " proportion their wages to their fervices; and that it is even permitted them to act in this " manner, if they are fo distressed in their cir-" cumstances, when they offer themselves to a mafter, that they are obliged to accept of the " wages offered to them by him, whilft other " fervants, not more capable than themselves, " gain greater wages *."

The

* This account is taken from the Provincial Letters of Paical; a work in which this great and good man shews himself

The Parliament of Paris very wifely and very justly paid no regard to this wretched sophistry, and condemned Jean d'Alba to be whipped before the door of the College of Clermont by the common hangman, who was at the same time to burn the book in which this detestable and pernicious maxim was contained.

The Jesuits were at this time in great favour at the Court of Louis the Fourteenth. The matter was hushed up, and Jean d'Alba was no more heard of.

It has been observed, that the teachers of mischievous and destructive doctrines appear in general to expect that their fatal consequences will never reach themselves. The "poisoned "chalice, however, sometimes returns to their "own lips."

Those who inflame the people to tumult and to sedition, are often the first to perish in the conflagration which they have occasioned; and the propagators of immoral and irreligious himself as much superior to ordinary mortals, as in some parts of his "Penses" he shews himself inserior to them. A. selection from the "Penses," made with care, and translated into English, would prove a valuable acquisition to the literature of this country.

opinions have many times, in their own families and connections, suffered from their too successful efforts to shake off the salutary referaints imposed upon mankind *.

ABBÉ DE RANCÉ,

in Normandy, had in early life been a man of elegance and of pleasure. At the age of four-teen, he published an edition of Anacreon; and at a very early age was appointed coadjutor to his uncle the Archbishop of Tours. Having narrowly escaped being shot by the bursting of a gun on his shoulder, he became a penitent, bade adieu to the world and its votaries, gave up his pretensions to succeed his uncle, and retired to the Convent of La Trappe: there he planned that very strict reform in its discipline, to which it has rigidly adhered for above

* A fervant of a Gentleman but too apt to blazon his infidel opinions robbed his master, who reproached him very severely with the crime which he had committed. The servant replied, that as his master had in his conversations taken away the superior consideration of a life to come to restrain his conduct, he ought not to be surprized if his frequent auditor taked the inferior consideration of punishment in this life.

a century, and which has rendered it so deservedly famous throughout Europe. It was said of him, as of an ancient Philosopher,

" Esurire docet, et invenit discipulos."

Some of his regulations are as follow:

- "A perpetual filence is to be observed in the Cloysters. If a stranger has occasion for any thing in the Convent, he must address himself to the Porter, or to him that receives the strangers; because the Monks, being obliged to keep a most strict silence, never give any answer to those who speak to them.
- "For the diet of the Monks, vegetables, roots, herbs, bread, and milk, alone shall be ferved up in the Refectory. They shall never be permitted to taste there either fish or eggs.
- "The first Monks of the Order (that of St. Benedict) ever looked upon working with their hands as one of their principal obligations. The Monks shall proceed to the different labours that are assigned to them in a manner that has nothing light, nor hasty, nor indolent in it. They shall not permit their senses to be interested in the most involute.

" different objects, nor shall they use any vio-" lent exertion even in the very works about " which they are employed; confidering that " manual labour is the first punishment an-" nexed to fin, and an exercise extremely well " fuited to the state of the poor and of the " penitent, and that it is a very powerful " means to fanctify them in their profession.

"They shall never mention any story re-" lating to common life, under pretence of " drawing instruction from it; and they shall " banish from their conversation any news " from the public papers, as well as those of the "times, and of the world, and of the Court, " and of the College: those having a tendency " to indifpose the minds of the Monks to " their present situation, and lead them into " diffipation, and into the remembrance of " things that they ought to have forgotten."

The Monks, except at bed-time, are generally together. The Reformer, like that acute observer of human life, Dr. Johnson, knew but too well how much more dangerous folitary vices are than focial ones; and that many perfons are restrained from vice by the eyes of their fellow-creatures, who would not pay the fame respect to the vigilant eye of Omnipotence and Omniscience itself.

The remains of this venerable Community are, by the pious kindness of Mr. Weld, of Lulworth Castle, settled in his extensive and beautiful domain, where every thing is furnished to them for which their abstinence and self-denial can possibly have occasion.

During the late prophanation of all things human and divine in France, these illustrious Ascetics made a vow, that if they ever sound a permanent asylum in Europe, they would drink nothing but water in suture. To this they have conformed with the same scrupulosity that has ever distinguished the Monks of La Trappe.

Their Convent in Normandy is, as if in derision of its ancient designation, converted by the present ruling powers of France into a soundry for cannon; in which the former solitude and silence that prevailed there, the whispered prayers of the afflicted, and the suppressed sighs of the penitent, are ill exchanged for the horrid din of those mortal engines, whose rude throats

Th' immortal Jove's dread thunders counterfeit.

FRANÇOIS CASSANDRE,

who translated Aristotle's "Poetics" into French with great fidelity, was a man of very violent temper and of very imprudent conduct, and lived in great want. He is thus described by Boileau:

" Je suis rustique & fier, & j'ai l'ame grossiere."

His discontented turn of mind followed him to the grave; for as he was dying, extended on a miserable pallet bed, his Confessor exhorted him to return his thanks to the Deity for all the blessings he had received from him. "Yes, to be sure," exclaimed Cassandre; "he has fuffered me to play a very pitiful part here indeed. You know how he has permitted me to live, and you now see how he lets me die,"

From the present imperfection of things, every state of life is obnoxious to discontent and complaint. They however should indulge them with great caution whose misery is procured by folly and by vice, and who have no reason to expect the interference of Omnipotence in those distresses of which themselves are the authors.

[ 357 ]

ŗ

GUI PATIN.

This learned physician was a great hater of the English nation on two accounts: the first, for having put their King, Charles the First, to death; the second, for giving antimony in severs. In one of his letters to M. Spon, of Lyons, he says, 66 Paris, 6 Mars 1654.

- " Notre accord est fait avec Cromwell.
- "Nous reconnoissons la nouvelle Republic
- " d'Angleterre, et nous aurons pour cet effet
- " un Embassadeur à Londres. Celui qui y
- " est, sera continué; c'est M. Bordaux, Maître
- " des Requêtes. J'ai oui dire quatre vers
- " Latins à un honnête homme, qui l'on dit
- " avoir été envoyez d'Angleterre. Les voici :
  - " Cromwello furgente, jacet domus alta Stuarti

    " Et domus Auriaci Martia fracta jacet.
  - 2 Quod jacet haud miror, miror quod Gallus Iberque
    Et Danus, et regum quicquid ubique jacet.
  - " At Cromwell's rifing fun, in glory bright,
  - " Nassau and Stuart's stars set deep in night.
  - "This is no wonder-but I much admire
  - 56 That Europe's Sovereigns do not all conspire
  - " To crush th' Usurper's ill-acquired state,
  - & And injur'd Royalty to vindicate."

Patin's Sovereign Louis XIV. having recovered from a fever after having taken antimony, he mentions with raptures the Latin lines that were made upon the occasion:

Vivis ab epoto, cur Rex Lodovice veneno Quid mirum? stibio plus valuére preces. Id cœli, non artis opus, sine lege medentum Nec datus ante Deo, sic potes inde mori. Civibus illa quidem fuerit medicina feralis, Nil lædunt unctos viva venena Deos.

Great Louis, after poison you survive!

No wonder, for our prayers have made you live!

More powerful than the metal's pointed sting,
Up to the throne of grace their way they wing.

This is the work of Heav'n and not of art,
Sacred to God, his care thou ever art!

The drug, thy subjects sure and deadly bane,
The Lord's anointed's life assails in vain.

PAVILLON.

This Frenchman was affuredly no great Poet. He was fond of books, yet could not afford to buy them. He therefore made use of this expedient: He addressed a sonnet to every author of note who published at Paris. This procured him a copy of the book ex dono austoris.

Public Libraries should contain (if it were possible) every book that has been printed upon every subject. Their funds are in general not very large. This defect was very well fupplied under the ancien regime of France. Every author who had acquired permission to print his book at Paris, forfeited that permission unless he printed it on good paper and excellent type, and deposited a copy in the Royal Library at Paris. By these means the King's Library was fupplied with every new book at no expence. This regulation might, in some degree, take place in this kingdom. By an Act of the Legislature, every author might be obliged to fend a copy of his book to the Library of the British Museum in London, and to the Public Libraries of the two Universities of England. This would occasion little or no defalcation of the profits of the work to the author, and would eminently promote the diffusion of learning and of knowledge.

PRINCE EUGENE.

This great General was a man of letters: he was intended for the Church, and was known at the Court of France by the name of the Abbé de la Savoie. Having made too free in a letter with some of Louis the Fourteenth's gallantries, he fled out of France, and served as a volunteer in the Emperor's fervice in Hungary against the Turks, where he soon distinguished himself by his talents for the military art. He was presented by the Emperor with a regiment, and a few years afterwards made Commander in Chief of his armies. Louvois, the infolent War Minister of the infolent Louis XIV. had written to him to tell him that he must never think of returning to his country: his reply was, " Eugene entrera un " jour en France en déput de Louvois et de cc Louis." In all his military expeditions he carried with him Thomas à Kempis de Imitatione. He feemed to be of the opinion of the great Gustavus Adolphus, King of Sweden, "that a 66 good Christian always made a good foldier." Being constantly busy, he held the passion of love very cleap, as a mere amusement, that ferved only to enlarge the power of women, and abridge that of men. He used to say, " Les " amoureux sont dans la société que ce les fana-" tiques sont en religion."

The Prince was observed to be one day very pensive, and on being asked by his favourite Aid-de-Camp on what he was meditating fo deeply, "My good friend," replied he, "I

- 44 am thinking, if Alexander the Great had 45 been obliged to wait for the approbation
- " been obliged to wait for the approbation of the Deputies of Holland before he at-
- of the Bepares of Honand Before he at-
- " tacked the enemy, how impossible it would
- " have been for him to have made talf the
- " conquests that he did."

This great General lived to a good old age, and being tom Mercurio quem Marti, "as much "a Scholar as a Soldier," amused himself with making a fine collection of books, pictures, and prints, which are now in the Emperor's collection at Vienna. The celebrated Cardinal Passionei, then Nuncio at Vienna, preached his funeral sermon, from this grand and well-appropriated text of Scripture:

"Alexander, fon of Philip the Macedonian, "made many wars, took many strong holds, "went through the ends of the earth, took spoils of many nations; the earth was quiet before him. After these things he fell sick, and perceived that he should die."—

Maccabees.

MARSHAL TURENNE.

Sec. 30.

OTHO VENIUS, Rubens' mafter, published a book on the resemblance of the countenances of men to those of animals. Turenne's was ever likened to that of a Lion; the bravery, the magnanimity, and the humanity of which animal he possessed in an eminent degree. The ETCHING of TURENNE prefixed to this Article, is taken from a Drawing of Mr. Richardson, after a Terra Cotta made by the celebrated Puget.

Who will exculpate Turenne from the ravages and horrors which the troops under his command committed in the Palatinate? His admirer and pupil, M. de St. Hilaire, fays, "The " violence of the foldiers at no time whatever "knew less bounds *. They set fire to every thing, and pretended to authorize their vio-" lences by those which had been practised " upon their comrades in the same country " by the peafants, who came down from the " hills upon them, to which they afterwards " betook themselves, after they had cut their "throats. But," adds St. Hilaire, "as if to " refine upon the cruelty of our foldiers, they " cut off the hands of those poor wretches " whom they met with, and killed them after-" wards."

La fureur des soldats ne connút jamais moins des bornes."
Menoires de St. HILAIRE.

TURENNE.

Kuliardson del

Tusu que me

Poloshed Leb L' 1700 or (edell and Davies, strand

The Elector Palatine was so indignant at the cruelties committed in his country by our soldiers, that his first emotion was to make it a private matter between himself and the General, and to send to him a trumpet, with a cartel of defiance.

In his letter he reproached him with his change of religion, and with the afylum which his (the Elector's) father had given in his Electorate to the Duke of Boullon, Turenne's father. He taxed him with ingratitude in having destroyed and burnt that very country. It finished by desiring satisfaction of him in single combat, either on foot or on horseback, as he pleased,

Turenne made no reply to the first two articles. With respect to the third, he took great pains to persuade the Elector, that his own subjects were the aggressors, and that they provoked these excesses by the unheard-of cruelties they had exercised against the French army; and that he could not be surprized that such conduct had excited his soldiers to that degree of sury, of which himself was the first to lament the excess. That with respect to the single combat to which he desied him, he was not at liberty to accept of it, as he was not in a situation to dispose of his own person as he pleased; but that he should present himself at the head of the army which he commanded, against any that his Electoral Highness should think fit to oppose to him.

Turenne never forgave himself for disclosing a secret of state to the beautiful Madame Coetquen. He used to say ever afterwards with some spleen, "that it was never worth while "for a man of honour to lose any of his time "with a pretty woman." Many years after his disclosing the secret with which Louis the Fourteenth had entrusted him, he said, "We "will talk of this matter by and by, it you "please, but let us first put out the can-"dles."

The following account of the death of this great General is taken from the Memoirs of M. de St. Hilaire, a Brigadier-General in the fervice of Louis XIV. and who ferved under Marshal Turenne in Germany.

"M. de Boze had twice sent to Marshal Turenne to desire him to come to a particular post. Turenne replied to his second message, as if he had foreseen what was to happen, that he was determined to stay

e where

where he was, unless something very extraordinary should take place. Le Boze sent a third time by Count Hamilton, to repre-" ient to him the absolute necessity there was " that he should come in person to give his orders. Turenne duectly mounted his horse. and in a gentle gallop reached a small valley, " through which they took him, that he might " be out of the reach of two small cannons "that were continually firing. In his way, he re perceived my father upon a height, to whom, " as he had the honour of his confidence, he " made up. The Marihal, when he had joined " him, flopped flort, and asked where was that column of the enemy's troops, for which they so had made him come thither. My father was fliewing it to him, when unfortunately 6 both these small cannons fired. The ball of one of them pailing over the croupier of my " father's herse, shot off his left arm, took off e part of the neck of my father's horse, and " struck M. de Turenne in his right side, who " rode on a few paces, and then fell dead from his hocke.

"Thus died that great man, who never had 66 his equal, and I am confident that all the e particulars relating to his death are strictly " true. All those who have written about it 66 had not the opportunity of being acquainted " with all the circumstances which I had. So 66 shocking a fight affected me with such vio-" lent grief, that even at this day I find it " more easy to renew my sensations than to " describe them. I knew not to which to fly " first, whether to my General or my Father. " Nature, however, decided me. I threw my-" felf on the neck of my father: on whom as "I was anxiously looking after those remains of " life which I nearly despaired to find, he said ** these words to me, words which the whole "French Nation thought fo noble, that it compared the heart which had dictated them, " to any heart that had ever animated the " breafts of the old and of the true Romans, " and I think they will not foon be forgotten: "Alas! my fon!" exclaimed he, "it is not " for me that you should weep, it is for the " death of that great man," pointing to the dead body of M. de Turenne. " In all proba-" bility you are about to lose a father, but your "Country and yourfelf will never again find " a General like to him whom you have just " loft." Having faid these words, the tears fell from his eyes: he then added, "Alas! poor army! what will become of you?" Then recovering himself, he said to me, "Go, my " dear, leave me, God will dispose of me as he " pleases.

" pleases. Mount your horse again, I insist on your doing so. Go, do your duty, and I des fire to live only long enough to be affured that you have done it well."

"My father refifted all the entreaties I made to him to permit me to ftay with him till a furgeon came, and he could be taken off the ground. I was under the necessity of obeying him, and of leaving him in the arms of my brother. I galloped away to our batteries, to make them fire, in hope of avenging the loss which my Country and myself had sustained.

"Some Officers of the army whom I saw afterwards, assured me, that the person who had fired that cannon so fatal to our army, had been killed the same day by one of our field-pieces. We indeed, soon after the death of M. de Turenne, heard a great cry on the height where was the left wing of the enemy, and we saw an Officer sall, apparently struck by one of our field-pieces. He was immediately surrounded by a number of persons who took him up; but he was not hurt, the head of his horse only was taken off. We were informed that it was M. de Montecuculi himself (the General of the army " of the enemy) who had escaped such immi" nent danger.

" It is impossible to imagine the alarm and "the consernation with which an army is af-" fected, who loses in the very fight of the enemy a General on whom it has the most " reliance, and whom it has as much reason to " love as to respect. The first emotion which " every foldier in our aimy felt on hearing of "the death of M. de Turenne, was an impetuous defire to avenge it by immediately atstacking the enemy. Whatever danger there " might be in doing this, it ceased to be dreaded: whatever difficulties might arise, they " were immediately furmounted. In the midst " of all this ardour, which animated every heart, 46 terror and indignation were still impressed " upon every countenance; and that grief " which weighed down the foul, unnerved " every arm, and rendered the body motion-66 less. I could not pass near fix or seven sol-" diers or officers together without feeing that " they were shedding tears. The two Lieute-" nant-Generals, not agreeing well together, " were in a state of uncertainty and perplexity. " One of them wished to give the enemy " battle; the other, more prudent, kept him 66 back; and it was not till after a very violent 66 dispute dispute, that they agreed to attempt nothing *6 that day at least. The enemy were informed " of the death of M. de Turenne by one of our "dragoons, who deferted to them on purpose " to acquaint them with it. It is well known " that M. de Montecuculi could not conceal the " joy he felt at being delivered from fo formi-" dable an enemy; and that he could not help " giving on the fpot too public and too visible " figns of that joy, at which he afterwards was " obliged to blush, when he wrote to his Sove-" reign the Emperor on the death of this great " Commander: for, after having congratulated " him on that event, he added, that he was full " obliged to regret a man like M. de Turenne, " who had done fo much honour to human " nature *."

Memoires de St. HILAIRE, 1766.

No greater testimony was ever given of the military merit of Turenne than that afforded by the great Condé himself. Previous to some battle in which he was about to be engaged, a difficulty occurred not easily settled even by his great powers of resource and of combination.

vot. iv. B B "What

<sup>* &</sup>quot;Etant serviteur de l'Empereur, je ne peux n'empecher de me en rejouir, mais je regrette, & je ne saurois assez re- gretter, un homme au dessus l'homme, & qui faisoit l'honneur à l'humanité."

over his mind, staggered and satisfied him.

His conversion was finished by reading the works of Bossuet, and by personal discussions with him. He spent three years in consider ing the subject; and when in 1668 he had taken his final resolution, and had told his

Sovereign of it, the King said to him, I look upon your conversion, Sir, as one of the most honourable things that can happen to the Church, and as one of the most useful to my kingdom."

By a letter in MS. in the Hôtel de Bouillon at Paris, it appears that the Pope offered Turenne a Cardinal's Hat on this occasion, which he refused.

It is faid, that this great General was originally intended by his parents for the church, in spite of his very early disposition to a military life. The reason that was assigned for thus thwarting his natural genius, was the supposed feebleness of his constitution. Turenne, to shew them how completely they were mistaken in that respect, at the age of sourteen stole away one night from his tutor, and was found the next morning asseep upon a cannon, on the ramparts of Sedan, the seat of the Court of his father the Duke of Bouillon. He was then permitted to follow his inclination, and ferved as a volunteer under his uncle the Prince of Orange, with great distinction; and by the usual gradations rose to the honour of being a Marshal of France, and a Commander of the Armies of that Nation. To the greatest prudence and courage, Turenne added the most perfect integrity and simplicity of character; so that Madame de Sevigné, in one of her letters, does not hyperbolically describe him as one of those men who are to be met with only in Plutarch's Lives.

Turenne was eafily diffinguished from the rest of his army by a pyed horse, of which he was very fond, and on which he constantly rode. One of the Officers in the army of the enemy, knowing this, procured a Swiss Officer in their service, a celebrated Engineer, to level a cannon particularly at Turenne.

Turenne's foldiers, on feeing their General dead, furrounded his body, which they covered with a cloak, and watched over it the whole night. It was afterwards carried in great pomp to the Royal Abbey of St. Denis, near Paris, and interred with those of the Kings of France. In the late general wreck and ravage in that country, of every thing that his hitherto been deemed diffinguished and facred among mankind, kind, it was torn from its peaceful and honourable fepulture, and was found entire and perfect.

MONTECUCULI.

This celebrated Commander used to say, that a great number of Generals is as pernicious to an army, as a great number of Physicians is to a fick man. He entertained no very high opinion of the efforts of allied armies in general. "They come together," faid he, "without " properly understanding what each other " means; they have different interests to pur-" fue, which they will not fufficiently explain " to each other; their language is different, " their manners not the same, and their disci-" pline diffimilar. Defensive war," adds he, in his Commentaries, "requires more knowledge " and precaution than offensive war. The least " failure is mortal, and the want of success is " exaggerated by fear, which acts always as a " microscope to calamities."

Montecuculi was called by some of his rash and unexperienced officers, the Temporizer; for, knowing but too well the uncertainty and the misery of war, he was never in a hurry to risk a battle, unless he was well assured of its success. He however told those who were distatisfied with his conduct, "I glory in a name which was that " given to the Roman General who saved his " country,

" Qui cunctando restituet rem."

Montecuculi wrote "Commentaries on the "Art of Wai," in Italian. They have been translated into French.

DUC DE MONTAUSIER.

This excellent Nobleman was the original of the celebrated Misanthrope of Moliere. He was a man of learning, of honour, and of virtue. His disposition was a little caustic and severe, which made Madame de Choisy compare him to a bundle of nettles, which, in whatever way it is turned, always stings.

Montausier was the only one of the Courtiers of Louis the Fourteenth, who had the honesty and the spirit to remonstrate with him on the subject of his ruinous and oppressive wars.

Louis.

Louis, on these occasions, used merely to say to those about him, "I cannot be displeased at " any thing the Duc de Montausier says to me, " for I know he always wishes me well."

Louis, however, still persisted in his satal system, yet such attractions does integrity possess, even for the mind of a despotic and a stattered Sovereign, that Louis entrusted the care of the education of his only son (le Grand Dauphin, as he was called) to M. de Montausier, and appointed him his Governor. The Duke discharged the high trust consided to him with equal ability and honesty; and in this situation his memory will ever be held dear by scholars, as he procured the celebrated Delphin Editions of the Latin Classics to be made for the use of his Royal Pupil; in which design he was ably seconded by the learned Huet, who was one of the Preceptors to the Dauphin.

Montausier very often gave practical lessons of virtue to his pupil. He took him one day into the miserable cottage of a peasant near the superb palace of Versailles. "See, "Sir," said he, "it is under this straw roof, and in this wretched hovel, that a father, a mother, and their children exist, who are incessantly labouring to procure that gold

"with which your palace is decorated, and who are nearly perishing with hunger to supply your table with dainties."

On the day in which M. de Montausier refigned his situation of Governor to the Dauphin, on his coming of age, he said to him, "If your Royal Highness is a man of honour, you will esteem me: if you are not, you will hate me; and I shall but too well know the reass fon of your dislike."

Louis the Fourteenth told M. de Montausier one day, that he had at last given up to public justice a man of rank who had killed nineteen persons. "Sire," replied he, "he only killed "one person, your Majesty killed the other eighteen. My ancestors, Sire," added he, were always faithful servants to their Sove-reigns your predecessors, but they never were their flatterers. Your Majesty sees, therefore, that the honest liberty of sentiment which I possess is a right inherent in my family, a kind of entailed estate, and that truth descends from father to son, as a part of my inheritance."

Montausier was Governor of the extensive Province of Normandy, and was setting out for the the capital of it, when he was informed that the plague had begun to make its appearance in it. His family endeavouring to prevail upon him to defift from his intention, as his health might be endangered by his residence in an infected city, he nobly replied, "I have always "been firmly convinced in my mind, that "Governors of Provinces, like Bishops, are obliged to residence. If, however, the obligation is not quite so strict on all occasions, it is at least equal in all times of public calamity."

Montaufier represented one day to his Sovereign Louis the Fourteenth, the poverty of the learned Madame Dacier, and requested a penfion for her. Louis told him that she was a Protestant, and that on that account he did not like to distinguish her. "Well then, Sire," eplied the Duke, "I will myself give her three hundred louis d'ors in your Majesty's name, and when you think fit you shall return me the money."

Louis, who was not fond of books, asked Montausier why he was always reading, and what good it did him. "Sire," replied he, "books have the same effect upon my mind, that the partridges your Majesty is so good as occasionally

" to fend me, have upon my body, they fup" port and nourish it."

"M. de Montausier," fays his Biographer, died in 1691, at the age of fourscore, regret- ted by his virtuous countrymen, to whom he was the model; and by the men of letters, of whom he was the protector."

CARDINAL DE POLIGNAC.

This celebrated scholar and negotiator is thus described by Madame de Sevigné:—"Car-"dinal de Polignac is a man of the most agrec- able understanding that I have ever known. He knows every thing, he talks upon every thing; and he has all the tostness, all the vivacity, and all the politeness, that one can wish to find in the conversation of any man,"

Louis the Fourteenth faid of M. de Polignac when he was very young, "I have just been "talking with a man, and a very young one too, who has never once been of the same opinion with myself, yet he has never once offended me by his difference of opinion."

"I do not know how it is," faid Pope Alexander the Eighth to Polignac, "you always ap." pear to be of my way of thinking, and yet your "opinion at last gets the better."

At the Conferences of Gertuydenberg, fo mortifying to the pride of Louis the Fourteenth, Buys, the head of the Dutch Deputation, interrupted the reading of the preliminaries that were to be fettled between his nation and that of France, by faying in barbarous Latin (alluding to the towns taken by Louis in Flanders), " Non dimittetur peccatum ussi tolletur " ablutum." Polignac with great indignation replied, "Gentlemen, you talk too much like " persons who have not been accustomed to " be victorious." However, at the negotiations previous to the Treaty of Utrecht, when the Dutch, at the instance of their Allies, were obliged to confent to a peace, Polignac took ample revenge on them, and told them, "Gen-" tlemen, we shall not stir from this place; we " shall negotiate in the very heart of your Pro-" vinces: we shall negotiate respecting you; " and we shall negotiate without you." The fuccess of this negotiation procured Polignac a Cardinal's hat. Soon afterwards, being concerned in some intrigues against the Regent Duke of Orleans, he was banished to one of his Abbeys.

Abbeys, where, verifying the fentiment of Ariftotle, "that a good education enables a man "well to employ his leafure," he composed his celebrated Latin Poem against the system of Epicurus, called "Anti-Lucretius." The natural philosophy it contains is that of Descartes, which was at that time in vogue in France, that of Newton not being then sufficiently known in that kingdom *.

Cardinal de Polignac remained at Rome many years, Ambassador from the King of France to the Pope. While he was in that city, the capital of the fine arts, he had a project for turning the course of the Tiber for a short time, and to dig in the bed of that river for the remains of antiquity which he supposed had been thrown into it. " In all the civil wars of the " Roman Republic," faid he, "the party that " prevailed threw into the Tiber the statues of " the opposite party. They must still remain "there," added he: "I have never heard that " any of them have been taken out, and they " are of too heavy materials to have been car-" ried away by the stream of the river." Polignac used to complain, that he was not rich enough to put his project in execution, even if the Pope, by whom he was much beloved, would have given him all the necessary powers.

* Benedict Stay, a German, has fince put the fystem of Sir Isaac Newton into Latin verse.

The Cardinal was no less a man of dignity of mind than of wit; he was the protector of the English at Rome; and when one day, at his table, an English Gentleman was very witty at the expence of the House of Stuart, the Cardinal put an end to his improper and ill-timed conversation by telling him, "Sir, I have or-" ders to protect your person, but not your "discourse."

The Cardinal used to say, that as he passed through Rotterdam in his way to Poland, he paid a visit to the celebrated Bayle, and on asking him of what religion he then was (Bayle having changed his religion three times before he was sive-and-twenty), that ingenious and celebrated writer told him, that he was a Protestant. "You know, Sir," added he, "that "I protest against every thing that is said, and "every thing that is done."

ANTONIO PRIOLO,

A noble Venetian, followed the fortunes of the great Duke of Rohan, and became afterwards Secretary to the Duke of Longueville at the Treaty of Munster. He wrote a little volume, "de Rebus Galluis," relating to what paffed in France in his own Times, in which he reprefents himfelf as a man perfecuted by fortune, and writing that history to drive away the melancholy that hung over him, without any reference to the honour that was to be acquired by fuch an undertaking. " Non fama 6 sed requies mihi quæsita, fallendis innumeris ta-" dus, ipje me damnavi in hanc areao,:." He thus describes the French Vits of his time: "They haunt great men's tables, frequent " their own academies, and trick and trim " their native tongue without end. They run " about this way and that way to make vifits, " but do not delight in secret solitude, the only " ferment of studies +."

* From the Translation of Christopher Wase, Lendori 1671, octavo.

DUC DE LONGUEVILLE.

WHEN this high-minded Nobleman was one day teized by fome of his fycophants, to profecute fome neighbouring Gentlemen who had shot upon his manor, he replied, "I shall not follow "your advice: I had much rather have friends "than hares, I affure you."

The Duke, from friendship to the Prince of Condé, engaged with him in the intrigues against Mazarin, and prevented him from calling in the assistance of England against his country and his Sovereign.

MADAME DE LONGUEVILLE

feems completely to have answered the defeription given of the French Ladies of his time by Antonio Priolo, in his "History of "the Troubles of France during the Minority of Louis the Fourteenth."—"The Ladies," fays he, "following scholars, would make use of detraction, in their ruesles, and in their circles, curiously unravelling the mysteries of Government, and catching at the words and actions of the Cardinal (Mazarin).

384 MADAME DE LONGUEVILLE.

"Some of them profituting themselves to get at the secrets of the State, and making rebels of their husbands (thus doing more hurt by their lives than good by their exertions), fet all France in a combustion. Afterwards, when their designs failed, they pre-condemned themselves, and became nuns by a false semblance of religion, and a gross superstition, the door being shut to their vices, now grown out of season, and when sickly old age, condemned by the looking-glass, and by its peremptory sentence, death, doth dread titsels."

Madame de Longueville took a very decided part in the troubles of the Fronde against Cardinal Mazarin, and by the power of her chaims brought over the celebrated Duc de Rochefoucault to take part with the Princes, and had even pievailed upon the god-like Turenne to make the army revolt which he commanded. La Rochefoucault said indeed in the words of Racine, Pour satisfaire son cœur, pour plaire à ses beaux your, J'ai fait le guerre aux Rois, je l'aurois saite aux Dieux.

After the death of the Duke of Longueville, and when the troubles of France ceased, she retired tetired to a Convent, where she ended her days in penitence and austerity.

In the zenith of her charms and of her confequence, Madame de Longueville was taken to pass some days at a nobleman's house in the country. She was asked, as usual, how she intended to entertain herself there, whether in walking, in reading, or in any of the amusements of the field. She put the negative on these, and frankly answered, "Je n'anne" point les amusemens honnétes." Her brother the Prince of Condé was one day reading to her part of an epic Poem, and asked her what she thought of it. "Il est très beaux, en verité, "mais très ennuyeux—It is very sine, to be sure, "but it is very tiresome."

Madame de Longueville became quite another personage when she became religious. For her first advances to that disposition of mind she was indebted to her aunt the Duchess of Montmorency (widow of the Duke of that name who was beheaded by the sanguinary Richelieu), who had taken the veil, and was made the Abbess of a Convent at Moulins*, to consecrate the remainder of her life

* At the Convent of the Urfulins of that Town, in the Church of which Convent she erected a most magvol. 14. c c miscent to lament the loss and to pray for the foul of her accomplished and beloved husband. Madame de Longueville was observed one day, at the Convent of Port Royal, sitting and conversing with a gentleman who belonged to that celebrated seminary of learning and of piety, and who was the gardener of the place. The gentleman said to her, "What would the world fay of your Highness, if they saw a gardener conversing familiarly with you, and seated in your presence?"—"The world," replied Madame de Longueville, "would say that I am much altered."

At the conference between Cardinal Mazarin and Don Louis de Haro, which took place previous to the celebrated Treaty of the Pyronees, whilft the latter negotiator was telling the Cardinal that one woman, meaning Madame de Longueville, could not possibly disturb the tranquillity of a great kingdom like that of Trance: "Alas, Sir," replied Mazarin, "your "Excellence talks much at your ease upon "these matters. Your women in Spain medded with no intrigues but those of gallantry, that it is not so in France, we have there three women that are capable either of governing or of destroying three great kingdoms—Madame de Longueville, the Princess Palatine, and the Duchess of Chevreuse."

Milicent Mausoleum to the memory of this illustrious No-

NICOLO POUSSIN.

"During my residence at Rome," says the ingenious Author of "Les Melanges de "Literature," which go under the name of Vigneuil Merveille, "I often saw Poussin, both "at his own house, and at that of the Chevalier del Poso, one of the most accomplished Gentilemen of Italy of his time.

"I have often beheld with aftonishment the great zeal that this excellent painter had to become perfect in his art. I have often met him, at a very advanced age, amongst the ruins of antient Rome, and often in the Campagna, and often on the banks of the Tiber, observing and drawing what he found there most to his taste. I have often seen him bringing home in his handkerchief slints, moss, flowers, and such like substances, which he was anxious to paint after the objects themselves.

"I remember to have asked him one day, by what means he had arrived to that great degree of eminence in his art, which had placed him so very high amongst the great Italian painter. He modestly replied, "Je n'ai rien negligé," I have neglected nothing that in any way related to my Art. And, indeed," adds the Chevalier del Poso, "it appears by his pictures that he neglected nothing that could enable him to become one of the best painters in the world."

According to Felibien, who was an intimate friend of Pouffin, his pictures did not very much please the Romans; so that for a picture painted by him, representing a Prophet, he was paid only eight livres, whilst a copy of it, made by a young artist, was fold for four crowns. He was, however, no complainer of his want of patronage, and used occasionally to return money to those persons who, in his opinion, had paid him too much for his labours.

Pouffin was a man of great simplicity in his manner of living and in his conversation. His whole mind was occupied with his art, and rendered him insensible to those gratifications of luxury of which some refined minds are but too fond. He was an Athenian in his taste, yet a Spartan in his habits of life, and united the elegance of the one with the aufterity of the other.

Pouffin, when his diffolution was approaching very fast, had received from M. de Chambrai his Treatise on Painting. He wrote with difficulty, on account of his bodily infirmities, and thus addressed him:

"I must, Sir, endeavour to rouse myself " after fo long a filence. I must make my-" felf understood by you whilst my pulse has " still power to beat a little. I have read 45 and examined at my leifure your book On " the perfect Idea of Painting, which has ferved " as a kind of nourishment to my disordered " mind; and I am rejoiced that you are the " first person of our nation who has opened " the eyes of those, who, seeing only by the " eyes of other persons, permitted themselves " to be deceived by public opinion. Indeed, " you have fo well explained and enlightened " a fubject very harsh and difficult to manage, " that, perhaps, by-and-by fome one may be " found who will be able to improve the art of-" painting *."

" There

* This person, indeed, we have the honour to possess at present in this country: " an ingenious Critic," as

"There are nine things in painting," adds Pouffin, in this Letter to M. de Chambrai, "which can never be taught, and which are effential to that art. To begin with the fubject of it, it should be noble, and receive no quality from the person who treats it; and, to give opportunity to the painter to shew his talents and his industry, it must be taken as capable of receiving the most excellent form. A painter should begin with disposition, then ornament should follow, then agreement of the parts, beauty, grace, fpirit, costume, regard to nature and probability; and judgment above all. These last must be in the painter humself, and

Dr. Johnson, in his Life of Milton, with great Justice designates him; a Gentleman whose ardour for art is exceeded only by his intelligence in it; whose extreme delicacy of tafte is reftrained by his candour; whose great power of judging critically is suspended by his earnest defire to find out beauties, and whose liberality toward the professors of art is bounded only-by his faculty of extending it in whom the love of the beautiful vields only to the love of the good; in whose intellectual character fagacity is combined with investigation, and knowledge with ingenuity; and whose moral character the union of the Graces with the Virtues renders no less amiable than exemplary. The sketch of this character must have been delineated with more than the usual infelicity of the pen that attempts it, if it should be necessary to append to it the name of WILLIAM LOCK, Esc. of Norbury Park, Surry.

" cannot be taught. It is the golden bough of Virgil, that no one can either find or pluck unless his happy star conducts him to it. These nine points contain many things worthy to be described by good and by intelligent pens."

A person of quality having one day shewn this great Painter a picture done by himself, he said, "Signore, non vi manca ch'un poco di "necessita—You only want a little poverty, Sir, "to make you a good Painter."

Cardinal Massimi, who was a great admirer of Poussin, visited him often when he was at Rome, and one evening staid with him till it was dark. On his taking leave of him, Poussin followed him to the door with a lamp, and conducted him to his carriage. "How I pity you, M. Poussin," said the Cardinal, "for not having a servant!"—"And I, Sir," replied Poussin, "pity you much more for having "fuch a number."

Pouffin's great work is his fuite of the Seven Sacraments, which are wonderfully well composed, and most exquisitely executed; that of Marriage is said to be represented in a more feeble manner than the rest. This gave rise to the French Epigram, " Qu'un bon marriage " est dissicile à faire même en peinture."

This great Mafter did not meet with that patronage and applause in his own country, to which he was so eminently entitled. His simplicity of style and his chastity of colouring did not, perhaps, please his countrymen; so that he twice took refuge in Rome, where his talents met with minds congenial to them. At that city he died in 1665, at the age of seventy-one. His life is written by M. Bellori, who likewise honoured his memory with these lines:

Parce piis lachrymis, vivit Pussinus in urnâ. Vivere qui dederat, nestius ipse mori. Hic tamen ipse silet, si vis audire loquentem, Mirum est! in tabilis vivit et eloquitur.

Weep not for Poussin; he lives in the grave!

How can he die, who life to others gave!

Yet there he is filent. Would you hear him speak?

His voice in his impressive pictures seek.

As Poussin was one day attending a stranger to shew him the ruins of Rome, the traveller expressed a desire to take with him into his own country some piece of antiquity. Poussin told him that he would gratify his wish; and stooping down to the ground, brought up a handful handful of earth, mixed with fome small pieces of porphyry and marble nearly reduced to powder. "Take them for your Cabinet," said Poussin, "and say boldly, Questa è Roma "Antica."

The Crucifixion is a fubject on which the art of Painting has been long employed, and has been in general treated in the same uninteresting manner. Poussin has treated it like a Poet, and has added circumstances of horror which have escaped other Painters. He has chosen the moment at which the Son of God and the Saviour of Mankind has just expired on the Cross, under a black and a lurid sky, rendered full more fombre and horrid by fome glimpfes of the Moon, which appears to have lud its head, in execration of the dreadful act just committed. On a line with the Cross, is the Centurion with his guard, and fome women; and underneath it are some soldiers. who are casting lots for the vesture of Him who is on the Cross. Three or four figures of the Dead rife out of the ground (a cocumftance mentioned by the Evangelists to have taken place at the time), and are feen by one of the foldiers; who, in an attitude of the extremest terror, draws his fword.

Pouffin studied the Antique with the greatest diligence, and engrafted its various beauties and excellencies into his works. Raphael was his favourite among the Moderns, of whom he used to say, "that the Moderns were asses in comparison of Raphael, yet that he was an ass when compared with the Antients."

The great Prince of Condé was desirous to have a picture painted by this master. Pousfin thus wrote to his friend upon that occafion:

"I thank you very much for your remem"brance of me, and the kindness you have done me in not reminding his Highness of his intention to have one of my pictures.

"He applied too late to have justice done to his application. I am become too infirm, and the palsy prevents me from working. It is now some time since I have left off painting, and I think of nothing but of preparing myself for death, My body is already gone,
There are no hopes of life: it is all over with me!"

The inscription put upon Poussin's monument by his friend M. Nicaise begins thus, and well well describes the successful diligence of this great Artist:

D. O. M.
Nic. Poussino Gallico
Pictori suæ ætatis Primario
Qui Artem
Dum pertinaci studio prosequitur,
Brevi assecutus, posteå vicit.

RUBENS,

no less a Scholar than a Painter, animafed the efforts of his pencil by enriching his imagination with passages from Homer and from Virgil. These he occasionally repeated as he was working at his easel, and called in the assistance of the fifter Art to aid the poetry of the pencil by the painting of words. With what fuccess he thus conjoined the Sifter Arts, his celebrated Gallery of the Luxemburgh will evince, which has long been the admiration of mankind, for magic of colouring, fertility of invention, and grandeur of composition. Guido used to say, that no one put figures together fo well as Rubens; and indeed, whoever attends to the last picture in the Gallery of the Luxemburgh, that of the Coronation of the Queen at St. Denis, must allow that it has never been exceeded in justness, or in splendor and magnificence of composition.

Sir Joshua Reynolds used to say, that the most grand as well as the most perfect piece of composition in the world, was that of Ruben's picture of the Fall of the Danned, in the Gallery of Dusseldors. The subject is dreadful; and the skill and artisize of design which are displayed in combining together so varied, so heterogeneous, and so horrid a mass is wonderful, and exhibits the great invention no less than the composition of the master.

Rubens is a striking instance, how much easier it is to give precepts than to practise them. In his "Treatise on Painting," he advises the student to study with the utmost diligence the works of the Antients, in the remains of their statues and bas reliefs: yet in his Luxemburg Gallery, when he introduces the Apollo Belvidere, he makes rather an Apollo of Flanders than of Greece.

The Crucifixion of St. Peter with his head downwards, was the last of Rubens' Works, and that which he admired the most: he gave it to a Church in his native town of Cologne. The composition of his celebrated Taking Down from the Cross is said to have been borrowed exactly from an old Print: the original is indeed excellent; and Rubens, in a moment of idleness, might perhaps think that he could not go beyond it.

To the talents of a Painter, Rubens added all the virtues of a Christian, and the graces of a Gentleman. He seems to have been extremely liberal, and to have painted many pictures for Churches and Convents from motives of piety and charity. These appear to have been some of the happiest efforts of his pencil, no less with respect to their execution, than the motives which inspired them.

LE SUEUR.

This excellent Painter was pupil to Simon Vouet. He foon surpassed his master, and, though he had never quitted France, became, in some points of the art, one of the first painters of his time. His contemporary Le Brun appears to have been very jealous of his superior talents; for, on hearing of his death, he malignantly said, "I feel now as if I had a "thorn just taken out of my foot."

Le Sueur died young, and left behind hirr many works, such as The Closster of the Chartreux at Pais, Alexander and his Physician, &c that might rival the works of the greatest painters for elegance of design, beauty of form, and truth of expression. In colouring he was desective, that mercuicious and ambitious appendage of the art where it is exercised upon great subjects, and embraces extensive compositions, the appropriated effects of which can be as well produced in charo of curo.

BOUCHARDON.

A MORE unbiaffed and more unequivocal testimony was never afforded to the ment of the Iliad of Homer, than that given by this sculptor. By some accident he stumbled on the old miserable translation of Homer into French verse, and the images which it supplied to a man of his aident imagination struck him so forcibly, that he told one of his friends soon afterwards, "I met the other day with an old "French book that I had never seen before. "It is called Homer's Iliad, I think I do not know how it is, but since I have read it, "men appear to me to be sifteen feet high,

" and I cannot get a wink of fleep at night"

D'Alembert.

D'Alembert, who mentions this anecdote, fays, that he once heard an artist talk nearly the fame language to him, "and who," adds ne, 11 In speaking like Bouchardon, did not speak " after him "

The speech of Bouchardon to his friend respecting Homei induced the celebrated Count Caylus to fet about a little work, of great use to painters and to sculptors, entitled, "Tableaux " tu ées d'Homere," octavo —" Subjects for Artists, taken from the Iliad and the Odyssey of " Homer "

CHARLES THE FIFTH.

DUKE OF LORRAINL

[1675-1690]

This great and unfoitunate Prince, according to Henault, fucceeded to his uncle Charles the Fourth, not so much in his Duchy as in the hopes of recovering it, it having been wiested from him by Louis the Fourteenth He took is the motto to his standards, " Aut num, aut " ninquam," but was not the more fuccessful, the Marshal Crequi continually preventing his entrance into his dominions. He was more fortunite, § fortunate, however, when he fought for others; and gained for his relation Leopold Emperor of Germany (whose cause he had espoused) many victories, both over his rebellious fubjects and over the Turks He was a Prince of great honour and piety, and, according to Marshal Berwick, so difinterested, that when the Emperoi was disposed to go to war with France (which was the only chance the Duke had of recovering his Duchy), he wrote to him to tell him, that he ought to prefer the general good of Christianity to his private animolities, and that if at that particular period he would employ all his forces in Hungary against the Turks, he could nearly promise him to drive those insidels out of Europe

The Emperor agreed to this magninimous proposal of the Duke of Loriaine, and sent to him to come to him at Vienna, to take the command of his armies. On his journey he was taken ill of a fever, and, a few hours before he died, wrote the following letter to the Emperor, which breathes the spirit of a Man, a Hero, and a Christian

&quot; Sne,

&quot;Aussitot que j'ai reçu vos oidres, je fuis paiti d'Inspruk pour me rendre à Vienne,

&quot; mais

" mais je me tiouve arrété ici par les ordres

" d'un plus grand Maîtie Je pars, et je vais

" lui iendre compte d'une vie que j'auiois con-

" facrée à votre service Souvenez-vous, Sire,

" que je quitte une femme qui vous touche,

" des ensans auxquels je ne laisse que mon

" epée, et mes fujets dans l'oppression

" CHARLES * "

Louis the Fourteenth, on hearing of the death of the Duke of Lorraine, nobly exclaimed, "I " have then loft the bravest and the most ge" nerous enemy I ever had His least excel" lence was that of being a Prince."

* Sue,

"As foon as I received your commands, I fet out for

"Inspruck, on my way to Vienna, but I find myself

6' stopped in that city by the orders of a greater Master I

" depart, and am going to give him an account of a life,

"that I would otherwife have confecrated to your fervice.

Remember, Sire, that I leave behind me a wife who is " your relation, children to whom I have nothing to give

" but my fwoid, and my fubjects who are in a state of 66 oppression.

" CHARLES,"

LOUIS THE FIFTEENTH,

SURNAMED THE WELL-BELOVED.

[1715-1774]

This Monarch, on feeing the tombs of Charles the Bold, Duke of Burgundy, and of Margaret of Auftria, exclaimed, "Behold the "cradle of all our wars!"

When he was before the walls of Menin, in Flanders, he was told, that if he chose to risk an attack, that place would be taken four days sooner than it otherwise would be "Let us "take it then," replied he, "four days later." I had ruther lose these four days, than one of "my subjects"

He was a man of good fense, but of no great re ding he used, however, to assomish the Noblemen who made up his party in the evening, by the apparent knowledge he had of what was going on in the literary world at Paris. He received every week a prices of every new book that was published in that Capital, made so him by one of his attendants.

"On he ring of his death," fays Brotici, "a great Mon'rch exclaimed, "Louis was a "man

- " man of uprightness and integrity I have known him by a long epistolary correspond-
- " ence which we kept up together"

Louis had, however, the weakness of giving to his Ministers only a part of his confidence he set spies upon them, and the Count de Broglio, brother of the Marshal of that name, was at the head of his secret and private Cabret, which not unfrequently counteracted the plans of his public and acknowledged Administration

LOUIS, DAUPHIN,

This Fiench Germanicus was educated by the virtuous and intelligent Marshal de Muy, and did complete justice to the pains that his excellent Governoi took for his education "A "Dauphin," faid this Prince, "should be a "mere cypher in the Government of France, "whilst a King of that Country should endea-" your to do every thing"

When Louis the Fifteenth presented the Dauphin, then a very young man, to the Prince of Conti, he said, "Well, cousin, what do you DD 2 "think think of my fon "-" Sire," replied he, "Il " lu manque feulement un an du Collège — All " that he wants, Sire, is to have been brought " up at a public feminary, he wants that free- dom and openness of manner, that possession of himself, which an affociation with young " men of his own age alone can give him ""

He used to say, "That a Sovereign should avoid war, without appearing to be assaud of it, carry it on with spirit, without loving it, be the first to brave that danger that other persons were incurring, shed his own blood with courage, and spare that of his subinjects"

To induce the Dauphin to ask for a greater allowance than his father granted him, some of the persons about his Court told him, that the Dauphin, the only son of Louis the Fourteenth, had a larger income than himself "Indeed," said he, "I should be very happy to have my

The French Writer who tells this anecdote obferves, "That all the French Princes who have diffin-"guished themselves were educated at a public seminary, as the great Prince of Condé and his Brothei at the "College Royal, and the late Prince of Conti at that of "Harcourt"

- " pension increased, were it not raised upon my fither's subjects"
- "Ignorance," faid he, "is the greatest misfortune that can hippen to a Prince. It is but feldom that a King forms, in cool blood, a design to enslave his people. Humanity opposes it, and his own interest deters him from it. Ignorance alone prevails upon him to attempt it. Ignorance then is the source of all his missines."
- "A Prince," he observed, "holds his exist"ence in the political world by his authority nonly Not to be perfectly acquainted with its origin, its extent, and its bounds, or to know them but superficially, is neither to know the nature nor the properties of his cxistence"

The names of the children of the Royal Family of France were used to be inscribed in the parish register of Versailles, the Dauphin took his children one day with him to the Church of that Town, and, opening the register before them, thus addressed them "Observe, my good "children, your names following, in regular order, the names of the poorest and of the lowest of my father's subjects Religion and Nature know no distinction Virtue alone DD 3 "makes

- " makes the difference between one person and
- " another, and perhars he whose name you
- " precede in this book may appear greater in
- " the eyes of God, than you may appear in
- " those of mankind"

The Duphin, with his usual paternal solicitude, caused a book to be written soi the use of his eldest son, the late unsoitunate King of France (a book now become useless) for the done public de France

DUKE OF ORLEANS, REGENT OF FRANCE.

THE PURPLE OF SELECT

Duclos favs of this Prince, "He was by nature humane, compufficiente, liberal, and brave He would have been a virtuous man, could any one be virtuous without principles." His Uncle (Louis the Fourteenth) faid of him, "that he was va fouf on des crimes, and," added this Monarch, "I really believe, that if the Duke of Orleans were to be feriously ill, he would have recourse to relies." and to holy water."

Mr Pope, speaking of him, says,

" A Godless Regent tremble at a Star !"

Duclos, in confirmation of his farcasm upon the Duke's soolish fears and idle superstition, says, "that the Duke used to run after every fortune-teller and assologer that came to Paris, and exhibited in his character all the credulous curiosity of a chamber-maid"

The Duke was a man of talents, a Musician, a Chemist, and a Painter, and he was more pleased with the compliments paid to him on his supposed excelence in any of these arts, than on any attention or flattery bellowed upon his rank or his courage

The Regent one day gave his diawing-master the choice of two pictures from his Gillery. He folicited two that were painted by his Royal Highness. They were of course presented to him, with a thousand louis d'ors, as a reward for the justiness of his taste.

The Duke distinguished himself extremely as a General in Spain, and was a man of great sense and great eloquence, yet, from the want of the proper direction of this affemblage of talents, his life was passed in a minner neither happy nor honourable to himself, nor useful to others. His mother used to say of him, that at his birth all the fairies in the neighbourhood

" lated, when so excellent a Prince as the King of Poland comes to claim it."

England has done itself immortal honour, by the protection it has afforded to the Emigrant Nobility and Priesthood of France during the late unparalleled Revolution in that country.

The liberality and generofity which the British Nation in general shewed to the unfortunate French who have resided among them gave occision to the following lines in 1791, to introduce a Lady of birth, of elegance, and of talents, to the notice of the Public as a singer.

TO MADAME DE S-

From Gallic horrors, and Sedition's roar,
Welcome, fweet Syren, to the British shore!
From his sim'd lyre such notes Amphion drew,
And straight Boestiv's stones to order slew,
Leap'd into soin, obedient to command,
And own d the magic of the master's hand.

Hidst thou attun'd thy sweetly-sounding string, I hine and thy injur'd Country's wrongs to sing, Hidst thou bewill'd, in thy all-powerful strain, Thy King a ciptive, and his Nobles slain; Whilst law and right, the sanctuary and throne, One equal wreck, one monstrous ruin own, Nor age not sex whilst Hell-born Rapine spares, I he hoary prelate from the altar tears,

The facred cloyster's reverend gloom invades,
Drags into day the Henrender oted modes!
And (shame! on shame!) pullates their prous ears.
With taunts profane, if with indecent years,—
The furious rabble sure had be ret to feel,
Rebellion's felt had sheath'd its muid'rous steel,
Discord for once had bade her horious cease,
And thou hadst sooth'd the midd ming herd to Peace!

How, un the thought ! for Gillia's modern i ice The antient fathers of their foil differee No more with zeal their Monarch they obey, No more they bend to Beauty's fofter fway, Traitors to every power they once ador'd, And true to Lice ice only and the Sword! A Bourbon now, 10bb'd of his v fl domain, His fibicets loyalty imploies in vain, Proud Auftrir's daughter, Gallia's be inte ous Queen, Blest with each grace of Pulles' lefty mice, Displays her mournful majesty of charms Unhecded in dift the din of civil arms Their Royal child, with fad affinght opprest, In vain feeks ruruge in a parciit's breast, In vain his helpless suppliant aims extends, No pity foothes, no pious care befriends, Whilst with a trambling voice and sliearning eyes, " O ipare my mother-spire your Queen," he cites (Patron of wreiched Gaul's difficated land, Oh fainted Monaich *, arm thy vengeful hand, Grasp the red bolt, avert this foul disgrace, And fave the glories of thy facred race!)

* St Louis, the Tutelar Sunt of France, from whom the prefent Royal Family is descended

Then, lovely Syren, welcome to this Ifle, Where temper'd Liberty has deign'd to imile! Where laws in Freedom's happiest hour design'd, The wonder and the envy or mankind, With equil force the Peer and Peafant bind; Where scale of rank but fans the mind's bright fire. And bids it to each dignity aspire, Where Kings, but echoing the public voice, Reign by true right divine, their people's choices No law less sway, no balefu power contess, Contented only with the power to bless, Fivour'd Vicegerents of th' Eternal Throne In mercy, its lov'd attribute, alone, Where every Mule has fix'd her willing feat, Where every talent finds a fure retreat, Where fost Human ty (the country's boust) Beckons cach wind'ing fufferer to the coaft. Here whilft thy trembling fingers strike the lyre To notes of horior or of fuft defire, Thy lips in firet vibiation pour around E ich mingled inelody of vocal found, And whilft, responsive to the well-irruck flyings, The little Loves expand their purple wings, O'ei every chaim of thy fair form preside, And each compos'd and decent motion guide, Whilst sed remembrance of a happier fite (A husband s love, a father's honour'd flate*) For one short paule airests the liquid note, And the figh lingers in thy tuncful throat,

* Madame de S——'s father was Under-Intendant to M Bertici, the Intendant of Piris, who was butchered by the mob of that city a few years ago

Whilst warm with extracy our bosoms glow, For thy sad ills the generous tears shall flow, Pity with transport in each breast unite, And sympathy give virtue to delight.

3.

In the frankness and openness of his character, and in some degree in his person, the Regent resembled Henry the Fourth, and he was much pleased when any one noticed the resemblance to him.

The Regent was a good judge of painting. The collection of pictures which he made at the Palais Royal was a very fine one, and united in itself the collections of Christina Queen of Sweden and Cardinal de Richelieu, with the additions made to it by himself. Speace in his "Anecdotes" says, that the most costly picture in the collection was the Belle Raphael (as it is called), and that it cost thirteen hundred pounds. Ten thousand guineas were offered lately, by a Sovereign, for the three Maries at the Sepulchre by Annibal Caracci. A French banker bought the Italian part of the Collection, and the Flemish part was on sale in London in the year 1793

The Regent's fon, on fucceeding his father, ordered Coypel to cut to pieces all the indecent pictures pictures in the Palais Royal This order was not rigidly complied with, as feveral of these pictures have made their way into other collections, as those of Diesden, Berlin, &c

La Grange had written a most abusive libel upon the Duke of Orleans in verse it was entitled "Les Philippiques," and accused him of every thing that was base and scandalous. The Regent sent for him, and asked him coolly, "Whether in his heart he believed him to be so bad a man as he had represented him." La Grange replied, "that he had not written a syllable in his book, that he did not besent, "it is well for you, that you are of that opinion, otherwise I should have ordered you to have been hung up immediately "

On his being appointed Regent, he infifted on being allowed the power of pardoning "I have no objection," faid he, "to have my hands tied from doing harm, but I will have "them free to do good"

<sup>* &</sup>quot;Nothing," fays Monteiquieu, " fo much leffers " the character of great men, is the attention they pay to their personal injuries. I know two men who were " entirely insensible to them, Julius Casir and the Regent " Duke of Orleans"

To his infant Sovereign he behaved with the utmost respect, and took great pains to instruct him. "I will conceal nothing from your "Myesty," said he to him, "not even your faults"

"The Regent died," fays Duclos, "of the indulgence of gross pleatures (de sa chere capule, as he terms it), in spite of the advice of his Physicians and of his friends A man," adds Duclos, "quits his vices in general, when he is quitted by them the indulgence, however, of gross pleasures is too apt to remain with him, till it makes him at last fall a victim to its permicious effects"

MADAME DE BAVIERE, MOTHER OF THE REGENS OF FRANCE,

is thus described by Duclos "She was ex"tremely fond of her son, though she was "much distrissed with his conduct. This "Princes had giert good sense, was a woman
"of virtue and of honour, much attached to
"the decorum of her situation, and to the "etiquette of her rank. An excellent state
"of health which nothing could affect, and
"which

"which prevented her from requiring any de"licacy with respect to heiself, made her appear haish and unseeling to others, whom
"she could not persibly suppose to stand in "need of any kind of management or attention to their feelings. She was a German,
"and was extremely fond of persons of that "Nation indeed it was sufficient only to be of that Nation to have a claim to her atten"tion."

Some expects from the letters of this Princels to Caroline Queen of George the Second, were printed a few years ago, they are curious, but very groß. Mr. S.—, who was Bedchumber-woman to Queen Caroline, und to fay, that the remembered perfectly well the Queen's receiving many of their, and that the occasionally faid, "These are letters not fit for every one to read."

On the death of this Princels, some one, in allusion to the extremely victous character of her son, and to the Proveib that has had its function in the experience of all ages and of all countries to its truth, "Idlencis is the mother of Vice," wrote upon her coffin, "Cy gyst l'Oisweté, Here." hes Idleness."

CARDINAL DUBOIS.

The speech which this profligate Minister delivered to the Assembly of the Clergy, was made by Fontenelle, who wrote likewise the Epitaph for his Eminence, which he managed extremely well. Having nothing to say of the good qualities of the deceased Cardinal, he merely adverted in it to the height of his situation, and the uncertainty of power and of dignity. After the enumeration of all his titles and employments, he adds from Scripture, "What are all these titles and honours but the changing bow of Heaven, and the vampour that melts into an Passenger, intreat of Heaven for the deceased more solid and more substantial blessings."

The Monument represents the Cardinal on his knees with a book open before him, in which there is inscribed "Miscience" his eyes are turned towards the body of the church, as if to intreat continually the prayers of the congregation for him. The idea of it was suggested by a relation of his, an Ecclesiastic of great merit.

Soon

Dubois, foon after the Peace of Ryfwick, was in England, where he became acquainted with a celebrated Counters of that Nation, whom he wied to call "la plus belle Inequalité" du Monde" One of her friends, supposing (no doubt) that Dubois would become one day Prime Millister of France, gave him this advice "Take care never to serve any person "too much, you will always suffer for it, and I suppose that you are hardly enough of a "Don Quixore to pique yourself on the glory of making a man ungerteful"

The Cardinal, who had been exalted from a very mean fituation to the rank of Prime Minister of a great Country, and a Prince of the Church, used occasionally to exclaim, in the midst of all his consequence and splendor (so much envied by the rest of mankind), " Alas! how happy should I be, were I to es return to my old fituation and lodging in " a good fecond floor, with an old Gouver-" nante, and with a hundred and fifty pounds " a-year!" The observant Fortenelle used to fay, "What always made me fatisfied with " my low condition of life, was to fee Cardinal " Dubois come to ine to be foothed and com-" forted, and that I had never occasion to apply " to him for a fimilar purpose"

EE

VOL IV.

Soon after the Regent had made Dubois a Councillor of State, he fent for him, and taking him by the hand faid, "My good friend, we must now have a little honesty I must beg "to f you as a favour"

The Cardinal was a man of very piecise and accurate conversation, and had a great deal of general knowledge. This he took care to increase, by always leading, with great dexterity, the persons with whom he was conversing to subjects on which they had most knowledge *.

Mr Crawfuld, in one of his dispatches from the Court of France, after giving an account of the last hours of the Cardinal, embittered by the most horid toitules of mind and of body, thus delineates his character

- "His Eminence had no great order in private affairs, nor even in the conduct of the great detail of public business which he took upon him, so that there is a good deal of confusion in his family, and amongst his
- "that nine parts out of ten of what he I new, he had picked up in conventation. On reflecting a little," adds Menage, "I told him that I was precifely in the fame "fivuation."

"Clerks in their different offices He could never bring himself to distribute his time of doing business into appropriated hours and days, for the different iffairs of which he undertook the detail, and by this means feldom had time to finish any thing but what was immediately pressing, and remained almost in a continual hurry by the great multiplicity of affairs that necessfully crouded upon him in such a country as this, whilst he let every one know, that it was to him alone they must address themselves, if they expected to succeed in any demand they had to make"

The Cardinal, whose papers were never put in any order, used frequently, in searching after any thing he wanted, to swear excessively. One of his Clerks told him, "Your Eminence had better hise a man to swear for you, and then you will gain so much time."

MR. LAW.

This celebrated Projector, soon after his arrival at Paris, boasted, "that he would make "France so powerful, that every other Nation in Europe should fend Ambassadors to it,

- " but that the King of France should merely
- " fend Meffengers to the other Nations ' "

A friend of Law's asked him one day, whether it were true that he was going to war with England "I should think," added he, "that "a Minister like yourself, whose interest it is "to make the State slow of by commerce, and by establishments that require peace, would "never think of going to war" Law calmly replied, "Sir, I do not define war, but I am not "afraid of it"

Law had promised his master, the Regent, mountains of gold, and when his promises fuled, the Regent tent for him, called him by all the opprobnous epithers that he could think of — Knive, Madrin ' and faid, that he did not know what brokered him from sending him to the B stile, for that there never was any pulon sent there who deserved it so well as himself.

&quot; Je 1 minut la France, grand, que toutes les Nations les le Furope enteriorit des Aubrifaleurs à Pares, et le Roi et revient que des Come, "

M BOUDOU.

This eminent Surgeon was one day fait for by the Cardinal Dubois, Prime Minister of France, to perform every serious operation upon him. The Cardinal, on seeing him enter the room, said to him, "You must not expect, "Sir, to treat me in the same rough manner as you treat your poor miserable wretches at "your Hospital of the Hôtel Dieu"—"My "Loid," replied M Boudou with great dignity, "every one of those miserable wretches, "as your Eminence is pleased to call them, is a Prime Minister in my eyes"

M DE BELSUNCE, BISHOP OF MARGEILLES

"MARSEILLES' good Bishop" was of the family of Belsunce in the province of Guienne in France. He had taken the vows as a Jesuit, and became afterwards Bishop of Marseilles. In consideration of the eminent services he rendered to that city during the plague that visited it in 1720, the Regent officied him the richer and more honourable see of Laon in Picaidy He refuied that bishopiic, giving as a reason, his unwillingness to leave a flock that had been endeared to him by their sufferings: he was, however, prevailed upon to accept of a peculiar distinction with respect to the Court in which any lawfuits he might have the unhappiness to be engaged in should be tried. His pious and intrepid labours are commemorated in a picture in the town-hall of Marseilles, in which he is represented in his episcopal habit, attended by his almoners, giving his benediction to the dying and the dead that are at his feet. Father Vanniere, in his "Predium Russieum," alludes to M de Bessunce in these lines.

Picardy

Pre igus, assulus animos et corpora curis Sust nint, mort in v his culcure instumque I inchido vadens fer struta cadavera passu.

Profute of life, and produgal of gold,
The facted Prifor tends his fick'ring fold,
Repose of body and of mind distains,
To colim their woes, and mitigate their pains,
Bravely despites death, and ev'ry fear,
With holy rites their drooping hearts to chear,
Vast heaps of dead without dismay he views,
And with firm step his gen'rous way pursues,

Some others of the Bishops of Provence are mentioned with respect by Father Vanniere for their then humanity and exertions on this occasion, as M de Ventimille, Aichbishop of Aix, &c

M de Belsunce was an author He wrote the Lives of his Predecessors in the See of Marseilles, and some religious tracts

CARDINAL FLEURY.

When the Abbé de St Pierre presented his project of a perpetual peace 'to this wiley and experienced Minister, the Cardinal said, "Sil, "I am much assaid that you have forgotten the preliminary article. You have forgotten to send a troop of missionaries, to dispose the hearts and the minds of the different Sovereigns of Europe towards your excellent project."

The Cardinal, like our excellent Minister Sit Robert Walpole, was forced into an expensive and rumous war by the clamour of faction and

Soon after St Pierre published his book, a Dutch Inn keeper fet up a fign, inscribed, "a la Parr perpetuelle" It represented a Church-yard, as if the mischievous passions and the sollies of mankind were to cease only with the total extinction of the human race the folly of the people On the Cardinal's part, indeed, he had taken the most effectual method of keeping the two great Nations of France and England in perfect harmony with one another. He used to remit to Sir Robert a certain sum of money occasionally, to be distributed amongst those, who, from disappointment and a love of revenge, were likely in this country to counteract his pacific intentions +

Fleury being one day told, that he was refponfible to his Sovereign for his conduct, replied, "Say, rather to God and to my con-"frience"

The As lorded with gold by Philip of Micedon took more Towns, perhaps, than his well disciplined and experienced aimies. The French have ever I nown how to apply that universal agent with great success. Most wars end as most revolutions begin, from the want of money it would therefore seem to be good policy, and even a great fiving of the precious metal, no less than of the lives and the happiness of mankind (which are not often sufficiently considered in the accounts of Statesmen) if the most dreadful of human calamities was attempted to be prevented by the same means which eventually put a stop to its progress.

MARSHAL SAXE.

To the honour of the humanity of this great General, the following story, told of him by M. de Senac, his Physician, should be mentioned. The night before the battle of Raucour, M. de Senac observed his illustrious patient very thoughtful, and asked him the reason of it, when he replied in a passage from the "Andromaque" of Racine,

Sorge, songe, Schal, à cette nuit cruelle, Qui fut pour tout un peuple une nuit eternelle, Songe aux cris des vainqueurs, songe aux cris des moucars,

Dans la flamme etouffes sous le fer experans:

Think, think, my friend, what horrid woes
To-morrow s morning must disclose
To thousands, by Fate's hard decree,
The last moin they shall ever see,
Think how the dying and the dead
O'er you extensive plain shall spread;
What horrid speciacles afford,
Scorched by the stimes, presented by the sword:

" and added, Et tous les foldats n'en favoient rien " encore—And all these Soldiers knew nothing " at all of what was to happen." The following Letters were written by Marflul Saxe to M D'Eon de Tissé, Censor Royal, and Secretary to the Regent Duke of Orleans. They are permitted to embellish this Collection, by the kindness of the Chevaliere D'Eon, niece to the person to whom they were addiessed.

" Monfieui,

- " JE vous prye einstan mant de preier une atas sion favorable a se que Mlle Sommer-
- " ville ' vous dua, ill ma paiu quon la vexe &
- " fut une bonne fille, a qui je seres charmé
- " de andre savisse, soiez persuadés que lon
- " sour et artre plus parfaitement,
  - " Monfieur,
  - "Votie ties humble & tres obeissent serviteur,

    "MAURICL DE SAXE,"
- " A Paris le Mardis
  - " dermers de Juillet,
  - " 1740"

" A _____

- " Je vous five d'aitre persuades, Monsieur,
- " que l'on ne fau et au e plus sensible que je le
- " fuis av muques de votie fouvenir & de votie
- " amities, elle me fer as toujour chere, & mais
- " sucso sa quier croit de nouves agremens pour

* An Actress of the French Opera.

- moy Cont je faures que vous vous y enter effes,
- " I'on fauret artie plus parfaitement,
  - " Monfieur,
  - "Votre tres humble & ties obe ffent ferviteur,

    "Maurice de Saxe."

Maishal Saxe was a Lutheran, and his body could not therefore be builed in any of the Catholic churches in France with the usual ceremonies attendant on the funerals of great men. This made the Queen of Louis the Fiftcenth say, with some archness, "What a pity it is that we cannot sing one De Profundis to a "man who has made us sing so many Te "Deums,"

Of the greatness of Marshal Saxe's courage who can doubt? yet his friends said of him, that he would never thight a duel, that he always

- * A greater degree of ridicule was never thrown upon duelling than by the following flory, which Dr Sandilands told to Mr Richardson, jun
- "Colonel Guife going over one campaign to Flanders,
- " observed a young 1aw Officer who was in the same veffel with him, and with his usual humanity told him, that
- he would take care of him and conduct him to Antwerp,
- " where they were both going, which he accordingly did,
- " and then took leave of him The young fellow was
- foon told, by some arch rogues whom he happened to always looked under his bed every night, an I every night locked his chamber door

M DUCLOS.

Louis the Fifteenth faid of Duclos, " Ciff in homne door et adicit," a man of full in with, that he must signilize himself by sighting " fome man of known courage, or elfe he would foon be of despited in the regiment. The young man faid, he " knew no one but Colonel Guise, and he had received " reat obligations from him It is all one for that, they i find, in these cases The Colonel was the fittest man in the world, every body knew his bravery Soon after-" wrids, up comes the young Officer to Colonel Guife, " as he was wilking up and down in the Coffee-house, and " began in a hesitating niannel to tell him, how much obliged he had been to him, and how fensible he was of 1 I is obligations Sir, replied Colonel Guife, I have done " my duty by you, and no more But Colonel, added the " young Officer, faultering, I am told that I must fight some "Gentleman of known resolution, and who his killed " feveral persons, and that nobody-Oh! Sir, replied the " Colonel, your friends do me too much honour, but there " is a Gentleman (pointing to a huge ficice-looling black " fellow that was fitting at one of the table ) who has kill-" ed half the regiment So up goes the Officer to him, " and tells nim, he is well informed of his bravery, and " that, for that reason, he must fight him Who I, Sir " replied the Gentleman why I am Peale the Apothe-" cary "-Rul willow and virtue and a man of the world He was the historiographer of France, and the only perfon to whom Rousseru ever dedicated any of his works. When he was at Rome he was asked by Clement XIII whether he intended to publish the Memoirs of his own Times. He replied, "Holy Father, I neither wish to desemble myself by flattery, nor to incur any unmecessary danger by telling the truth"

Speaking of Politeness in his "Confiderations" /u. les Manis," he says,

- " Mankind are fo much indebted to each
- " other, that they owe mutual attention, they
- owe each other a politeness worthy of them-
- " felves, worthy of thinking beings, and varied
- " according to the different fentiments that
- " should dictate it
  - "The politeness of the great therefore
- " should be that of huminity, and that of
- " inferiors gratitude, if the great deferve it;
- " that of equals eftern and mutual fervices,
- " far from endeavouring to encourage incivility,
- " it is much to be wished, that the politeness
- " arifing from fostnels of manners should be
- " ailded to that which proceeds from goodness
- " of heart

"The most pernicious effect of the common politeness of the world is, that it teaches us to do without those virtues which it imitates. Were we but trught by our education to be amane and benevolent, we should either possess politeness, or could do very well without it

"We should not perhaps have that politeness which announces itself by the Graces, but we should have that which announces the honest man and the man of honour We should then have no occasion to have recourse to mere appearances

- " Instead of being artificial to please, it would then be sufficient that we were good men; instead of being differiblers to flatter the weakness of others, it would be enough for us only to be indulgent to them
- "Those to whom we behaved in this man"ner would neither be rendered insolent nor
  "corrupted by it, they would only be grate"ful and become better"

It was an observation of Duclos, "That rogues always leagued together, whilst honest men kept themselves isolated.

"Impious and profligate writings," faid he,

"are read once for their novelty, and, except

"on account of the bad principles they con "tain, they would never have been taken the

"leaft notice of, like those obscure criminals

"whose names are known only by their crimes

"and their punishments"

These observations of Duclos are taken from his Life in the "Necrologe des Hommes celebres "de France," a work formerly published every year at Paris in 12mo. It contained the Lives of the distinguished Persons in Aims, in Arts, and in Learning, who had died within the year. It gave an account of their actions, their writings, their labours, and their discoveries, and contained as well the history of the progress of the human mind, as the lives of the persons mentioned in it. Each article was furnished by a person conversant with the profession of the particular person described in it. A book conducted on the same plan would be a great addition to the literature of this country

FONTENELLE.

FONTENELLE was of a good-humoured and apathiftical disposition He was once asked how he had mrnaged to be so generally liked as he was. He replied, "By observing these two mixims. One cannot tell what may happen, and every body may be right at last."

On feeing the buft of Boileau, the Saturit, he exclaimed, "I fay now of Boileau what I have always fuld, crown him with laurels, and hang him afterwards upon the next gibbet"."

Of a company confifting of men of no great understanding, and of Ludies who were of a certain age, he said, "Les hommes jont passeble, et "les semmes passes"

Some one asking him how old he was, he faid, "Hush! Pray don't speak so loud, death feems to have soigotten me, and you may perhaps put him in mind of me"

The Saturit but too often avenges he own miferies upon the feelings of others—Regner used to tell his fi ends, that he never became discontented with the world, till he had long been discontented with himself. A few hours before he died, being asked what he selt, he said, "rien qu'une difficulté "d'être"

Fontenelle's Diamas are very elegant in their style and in their thinking. His Eloges are excellent. His other works are of no great value. The 'History of Oracle.' was taken from Vandale, a heavy Dutch writer, and dressed up with Fontenelle's usual elegance.

MONTESQUIEU

faid to Madame d'Aiguillon on his death-bed,

- " I have always respected religion, the mora-
- " lity of the Gospel is the most valuable pre-
- " fent that God could have bestowed upon
- " mankind"

EXTRACTS FROM SOME DETACHED THOUGHTS OF MONTESQUIEU, PUBLISHED A FEW YEARS SINCE BY M. DE LA PLACE, OF BRUSSELS.

- " I am attached to my country, because I
- " like the Government under which I was
- " born, without being afraid of it, or expecting
- " any emolument from it. I share equally
- with my fellow-citizens in the protection vol. iv.

"which it affords to us, and I thank God that he has given to me a degree of mode"ration

"If I knew any thing that would be useful to myself, and at the same time prejudicial to my family, I would crase it from my mind, if I knew any thing that would be useful to my family, but prejudicial to my country, I would strive to forget it, if I knew any thing that would be useful to my country, but prejudical to mankind, I should look upon it as a crime

"We are allowed to aspire to the highest fituations in our country, because it is permitted to every citizen to wish to be useful to his country. Besides, a noble ambition (when properly directed) is a sentiment very useful to society, for, as the physical world fublishs only because every particle of matter tends to fly off from the centre, so the political world sustains itself by the inward and restless desire that every one has to remove from the situation in which he is placed.

"The heroism that found morality avows has very few chaims for most men, the he"roism

- rousin that destroys morality strikes us and forces our admiration.
- "There are no persons that I have ever more completely desprised, than withings, and persons of rank devoid of probity
- "My principle has always been, never to do that by another person which I could do by myself This has enabled me to make my fortune by the means which I had in my own power, moderation and frugality, and never by means external to myself, which are but too often base or unjust.

- " I love to frequent those houses where I can come off well with my every-day under- flanding
- "I doat upon friendship. I never remember in my life to have given away four louis d'ors from oftentation, or to have paid four visits from views of interest.
- "It was my intention to have made my "Efprit des Loix" a work of greater extent, "and to have confidered many parts of it more fully. I am now become unable to do as I "intended. My fludies have weakened my

- " eyes; and what light remains within, is merely
- " that of twilight, in which they will foon fet
- of for ever.
- "I am not so humble as the athesss are I would not change my hopes of immortality
- " for all their Quietism
- "Religion is peculially necessary to the Eng- " lish, as those persons who are not afraid to
- " destroy themselves, should at least be taught
- " the fatal and eternal confequences that attend
- " the 1ash and wicked action of a moment.
- "In the course of my life I have been very
- " foolish, but have never been malignant.
- " When I see a man of worth, I never attempt
- " to take him to pieces.
- "Idleness * should really be ranked amongst the tortures of Hell Yet people are foolish enough
- "Idleness," says Lavater, strongly, " is the original if fin of our first purents Do you not think it then dis-
- " obedience or rebellion? Nothing like it! their leading vice
- " was idleness He that can subdue that one vice, can nes
- or fail to accomplish whitever he purposes to do "
- "Idleness," says the learned Lord Monboddo, " is the fource of almost every vice and folly For a man who "does

" enough to class it with the beatitudes of "Heaven,

" Those

"does not know what to do, will do any thing rather than "nothing, and I maintain, that the richest man who is haunted by that foul fiend (as it may be called) is a "much more unhappy man than the day-labourer, who earns his daily bread by the sweat of his brow, and who therefore only submits to the sentence proncunced upon our first parents after their fall, and which, if it be understood (as I think it ought to be) of the labour of the mind as well as of the body, we must all submit to, or be miserable if we do not. And accordingly those, who have nothing to do, endeavour to fly from themselves, and many fly from the country and go abroad for no other reason.

Frustra, nam con es ati a petit sequiturque sugacem.

'Gainst the foul siend what can relief afford? Our bed he climbs, participates our board, Fly as we may o'er earth's extensive round He follows still, and at our heels is found From his fell looks each joy a blast acquires, And life itself beneath his grasp expires

"And some go out of life for no other reason (and I think there may be a worse reason), than because they have nothing to do in it?"

Metaphys vol 1v p 92.

"Werriness of life," fays Dr Darwin, "in its moderate degree has been esteemed a motive to action by some phisosophers, but those men who have run through the fusual amusements of life early, in respect of their age, and who have not industry or ability to cultivate those sciences

"Those persons who have little to do are great talkers A man talks, in general, in proportion to the small degree of thought which he possesses

"In the whole course of my life I have never known any persons completely despised, except those who keep bad company.

"Our modern orators appear to give in length what they want in depth *.

" If

"which afford a perpetual fund of novelty and of confequent entertainment, are liable to become tired of life, as
"they suppose there is nothing new to be found in it that "can afford them pleasure, like Alexander, who is faid to "have shed tears, because he had not another world to con"quer"

The remedies recommended by this ingenious philosopher against the tedium. wite are, "form restraint in ex"hausting the usual pleasures of the world early in life,
"the agreeable cares of a matrimonial life, the cultivation of science, as of Chemistry, Natural Philosophy, Natural "History, &c which supply an inexhaustible source of pleasurable novelty, and relieve ennus by the exertion they cocasion."

Zoonomia, vol 11

Tully humself calls this defect "calumna dicendi;" the scandal of public speaking. This abuse of a noble faculty has ultimately destroyed every State in which it has been practised. Athens and Rome fell when the tinsel of rhetoric

"If you ask me, my son, what in general are the prejudices of the English nation, and what they esteem most. I should answer your question with some difficulty. They do not appear to affect either war or ambition, neither those persons who are well with the Ladies, nor those who have the ears of the Minister. They appear desirous that men should be men They esteem only two things, wealth and merit."

"It is not," fays this acute writer, in his Spirit of Laws, "it is not my business to "enquire, whether the English really possess that freedom which they are supposed to have It is enough for my purpose that it is established by their Laws. I do not however pity those nations who do not enjoy that blessing I know but too well that excess of reason itself is not a desirable thing, and that in general manking adapt themselves better to a medium than to the extremes" was preferred to the pure gold of knowledge, when men affected to appear wife rather than be really io, and found the nation foolish enough to be fatisfied with the shadow instead of the substance "Is it not surprizing," iavs Dom Noel d'Argonne, "that, since eloquence has begun to be fushciently known, mankind should still continue to be duped by it?"

[ 440 ]

ABBE DE MARSY.

Du Fresnoy's Latin Poem on Painting is well known. It was written by an artist, but, though it contains many excellent precepts and observations relative to ait, it is, like most other Latin didactic poems, dry and uninteresting. Abbe Marsy's Latin Poem on the same subject is written with greater elegance of style, and with superior lairmony of versification. Many of the descriptions it contains are beautiful. It would appear to advantage in an English dress, were notes appended to it by an eminent Artist or a good Connecticut, in the same manner as Sir Joshua Reynolds's Comments illustrate the text of the translation of Du Fresnoy by Mr. Mason.

Musy was the son of the celebrated sculptor of the Baths of Diana in the gardens of Verfulles, and seems to have had a kind of hereditary right to taste and knowledge in art

He thus describes Le Sucur and Nicolo Poutin:

Succe quid cunssra loquar doctique Sabinas: Por fire Picturam Aufor...s ex quo deduxit ab oris

Et Româ ereptas tib. Gallia tradidit artes.

Le Sueur's fam'd Cloister all our wonder claims;

Why speak of learned Poussin's Sabine dames?

Poussin to whom indebted Gallia boasts Painting restored from the Italian coasts, Proud from his powers of pencil to assume
Each various grace of art desposl'd from Rome.

He thus commemorates Titian, the painter of Nature

Agnosio tuos Titiane colores

Docte tot illicibus succis decorare tabellas

Arti colorand, naturam ut vincere posses.

Titian, thy magic colours I descry,

Skill'd by the blended t nis that charm the eye;

That Art with Nature's self appears at strise,

And the dull canvas animates to life

M de la Mierre and M Watelet have written Poems on Painting in Fiench veise, taking many of their sentiments and observations from the Latin Poems of Du Fresnoy and de Maisy. They have not, I fear, found many admirers

Abbé de Marfy, speaking of the art of Painting * when exercised by such men as Michael

* The title of Marly's Poem is "Pictina," 1736 12mo, He wrote also a Latin Poem on Tragedy

Angelo and Julio Romano, describes its sublime effects, in some lines which may be well applied to the Gallery of Milton, now painting by Mr. Fuseli Nunc etiam impavidis sur gens ad sider a pennis Terrena nil sæcis habens, slammentia mundi Mænia transgreditur.

Painting, on fearless pinions borne, ascends
The stars exalted region, and, set free
From every seculence of this vile earth,
Bursts through the staming barriers of the world.

RAMEAU.

This great Musician possessed that enthussiasm, without which nothing great is ever effected. He had one day some men of letters at his house, who laughed at him very much on his making an anachronism. Rameau slew with great emotion to his harpsichord, and, running lapidly over the keys of it; played a most exquisite piece of harmony. "Now," said he, "Gentlemen, it surely shows more talent to be able to compose such a piece of music as "that which you have just heard, than to be able to tell in what year Charlemagne or "Clovis died. You only remember, I invent, "and

" and pray which is the most admirable, ge" nius or erudition?"

On a quarrel he had with the elegant Quinault, whose Operas he set to music, he said, "You will see how well I can do without my Poet I will in suture set the Dutch Gazette to music,"

The Collar of the Order of St Michael was intended for Rameau by Louis the Fifteenth He died, however, before he received it, and, at a public funeral, which the Royal Academy of Music made for him in one of the churches of Paris, the office for the dead was set to music, taken from his own Operas of Castor and Dardanus.

His enemies complained, without reason, that his music pleased merely from its difficulty of execution* It was indeed grand and claborate, and excelled in its power of harmony, and in the just combination of sounds apparently difcordant. This, however, evinced the genius and the knowledge of the master.

* Dr Johnson was observed by a musical friend of his, to be extremely inattentive at a Concert, whilst a celebrated solo player was running up the divisions and subdivisions of notes upon his violin. His friend, to induce him to take greater notice of what was going on, told him how extremely difficult it was "Difficult do you call it, "Sir" replied the Doctor, "I wish it were impossible"

M D'ACQUIN.

This giest Musician was a competitor for the exquisite organ of St. Paul's at Paris, with Rameau. They had each of them played a fugue, on the merit of which the judges were divided, and, as it was supposed that their compositions were premeditated, they were desired to execute a voluntary.

D'Acquin fiish ascends the organ-lost, throws his sword with some emotion at his seet, and exclaims, looking down upon his audience with an air of triumph, inspired by the consciousness of his own talents, "C'est moi qui vais toucher!" and in this transport of enthusiasm, which the indecision of his judges had occasioned, made such spirited efforts, that the suffiages were no longer divided, and he triumphed, in point of execution at least, over the greatest musician that France ever produced

Rameau, however successful his competitor had been, used to say of him, "There is no good "mustice" music now our taste for it is continually changing M d'Acquin alone has had the courage to stem the torient, he has always maintained to the Organ the majesty and the graces that are peculiarly apprepriated to that wonderful instrument he might, however, have given into all the tricks of execution if he had pleased, I admire him for not having done so."

J. Rouffeau, in his Mufical Dictionary, obferves, article Pieluder, "It is in this great art, "that our good Organists in France excel, such as M. d'Acquin and M. Claviere"

DU CERCEAU,

in his Life of the modern Roman Demagogue Rienzi, observes, "that popular talents, in "general, are combined with a certain degree of "infanity". The mass of mankind appear rather to be pleased with what dazzles than with that which convinces them, and are more impressed by the ardour of enterprize than by the sobriety of practicability. It is the exercised everalone which prefers the impasto of Titian to the glaize of Barocci,—solid and substantial colour to airy and diaphanous tints.

MARIVAUX.

This ingenious man, however metaphysical and alembicated he may be in his writings, was of great simplicity and bon hommie in his character and conversation. Having one day met with a sturdy beggar, who asked charity of him, he replied, "My good friend, strong and stout "as you are, it is a shame that you do not go "to work"—"Ah Master," said the beggar, "if "you did but know how lazy I am "—"Well," teplied Mairvaux, "I see thou art an honest "fellow, here is half a crown for you."

Being one day in company with Lord Boling-broke, who had professed himself an inside on many points of the Christian Religion, though he had mentioned as true many dubious historical facts, "Well, my Lord," said he, "if you are an inside, I see that it is not for want of faith."

LOUIS THE SIXTEENTH.

[1774-1793]

THE situation of this excellent Prince is thus emphatically described by that great Politician, Frederic, the last King of Prussia, in one of his letters to Voltaire:

" June 18, 1776.

- · " I наче lately learned that the King of
- France has displaced some of his Ministers
- I am not aftonished at it I look upon
- " Louis the Sixteenth as a young lamb in the - " midst of wolves He will be in great luck
- " if he gets out of their claws A person who
- -" should chance to have been in the habits of
- "Government, would be at present much puz-
- " zled in France,—watched and furrounded
- with artifices of every kind, he would be
- " forced to be guilty of mistakes How much
- " more likely then is it, that a young Prince,
- without experience, should be hurried along
- " by the torrent of intrigue and cabal
- "Those persons who have talked of the
- * French Government to you, have doubtless,
- " my dear Voltaire, exaggerated many things
  - " I have

"I have had an opportunity of getting at the true state of the revenues and of the debts of that kingdom. Its debts are enormous, its resources exhausted, and its taxes multiplied beyond bounds. The only method to diminish in time the load of these debts, would be to put its expences within certain limits, and to retrench every superfluity. But, alas! this I fear will never be done, for, instead of saying, I have such an income, and I can afford to spend so much of it, we are but too apt to say, I must have so much money, find out expedients to procure it for me.

"Those rogues of Monks should be made to bleed pretty freely. This, however, would not be sufficient (though it would undoubted edly afford some resources) to pay off the debts in a short time, and to procure for the people of Fiance all that affistance for which they have at present so great an occasion. This distressful situation took its rise in the preceding reigns, which contracted debts for the payment of which they had made no provision

"It is this derangement of its finances which so materially influences every part of

"tis Government It has put a ftop to the wife projects of M. de St Germain It has prevented its Administration from having that alcendancy in the affairs of Europe, which France has been ever used to take fince the reign of Henry the Fourth With iespect to your Parliaments, as a thinking man, I have constantly condemned the revocation of that of Paris, as contrary to every principle of logic and of good sense."

Is it then any wonder, that when M de Malsherbes came to request his dismission from Administration, the King exclaimed, "I can, in-"deed, grant you your dismission I wish I "were able to procure my own!"

His short-sighted Ministers, in these distressful circumstances, engaged him to affift the Colonies of a great Nation that were at war with the parent Country +, and not only to add

*That Manister of routine M de Vergennes, grown old in intrigue and cabal, used to exclaim with raphine after the American War, "I have cut off one arm from the proud Islanders, I will soon cut off the other." The direption of that arm, however, like the teeth of the series of Cadmus, has produced aimed legions, which have not only destroyed each other and the Country by whose tolly were the country by whose tolly

add to the immense debt already incurred in France, but to effect the propagation of that spirit of revolt which has ended so fatally for that kingdom

On an application made to him by Tippoo Saib, not long before he suffered, to affish him in taking possession of some Provinces in Indra from the English, and annexing them to the Crown of France, Louis nobly resused his affent, and sud, "In the American War, my "Ministers took advantage of my youth, and "inexperience Every calamity that we have "suffered in France took its rise from that "event"

During his infamous mock trial, this Plince was asked, What he had done with a certain sum of money—a sew thousand pounds. His voice failed him, and the tears came into his eves at this question, at last he replied, "Farmers" à faire des hem eux —I had a pleasure in mak"ing other people happy" He had given the money away in charity and treachery they were produced, but threaten the definition of Europe itself, and all that his been held facial for ages by the inhabitants of it

On the night pieceding his execution he faid to M Edgeworth, "I do not know what I have "done to my coufin the Duke of Oileans, to "induce him to behave to me in the way in "which he has done, but he is to be pitied; "he is still more wretched than I am, I would "not change situations with him"

A few hours before he died, he faid to the fame Gentleman, "How happy I am to have "retained my faith in religion. In what a "terrible flate of mind should I have been this moment, had not the grace of God preserved this blessing to me. Yes, I shall now be able to shew my enemies that I do not fear them."

As this monarch, the most benevolent, the best intentioned Prince, and the most affectionate lover of his people that Time has ever produced, was alcending the scaffold to suffer the sentence inslicted upon him by his unprincipled and infamous Judges, his virtuous and intrepid Confessor excluined, with all the energy of Corneille himself, " Digne enfant de " Saint Lours, monte en Ciel"

+ &quot;Il ny a que moi & M Turçe' qui a m ns h peuph," faid this unfortunate Prince, who, during the Revolution, was continually faying, "I cannot ben to have a drop of my "people's blood shed on my account"

O true descendant of a Sainted King, Let this sa scene to thee no terrors bring, Ascend the sciffold then with dauntless pace, It leads to join in Heaven thy sacred sace was one of those few Poets who sacrifice no less at the shrine of Plutus than at that of Apollo. In one of his letters to a friend, respecting economy, he has these excellent observations.

VOLTAIRE

- "A finall patrimony becomes every day finaller, for the price of every thing is continually increasing." A prudent man will be ever attentive to all the different operations that Government, confinitly haraffed for money, and continually thifting its plans of finance is making in the funds of the
- "He who e excises no trade or profession," says Mi Scarre Jen, as archy, 'as imposed upon the every one, "without any power of naking reputals. He is like a "room in the pulory, pelad by all without being able to "return it. He has but one chance, which sew rich?" function or ab lities will admit of, which is, that of reta"listing upon the public."

  "Country

"country There always are fome operations of going on, by which a private man may get a good deal of money, without having the least obligations to any one, and nothing furely can be so satisfactory to him, as to be indebted to himself soly see his own fortune." The first step towards it is always painful, the rest sollow as of course.

"A prudent man will be always economical in his youth, and at a certain age, he will find himself much richer than he ever expected to have been. That is the time in which a good fortune is the most effential to a mur's happiness. I am in that siturtion myself at present, and, after having lived a great deal with Kings, I am at last become a King myself. In France, you know, a man must be either a hammer or an anvil, I have chosen to be the first."

Voltane had written a Tragedy called Brutus, and had a share in a ship of that name, his Tragedy was damn'd, and his ship made a successful voyage "Well," said the Wir, one of my Brutus's has made amends for the "other"

When the Emperor Joseph travelled through Switzerland, he did not pay a visit to Voltane. He was asked by the leaned Baron Haller, why he had not called upon that celebrated Writer? The Emperor replied, "Had I tra-" velled, Sir, merely as an Emperor, I should "most assuredly have paid my respects to so "distinguished a character, but I travel as a "Gentleman, and am therefore anxious to "preserve all the punctilios that are annexed to that character a Gentleman cannot go to see a man who has been caned, and who has been disgraced by some decisions of the "Courts of Justice against him"

The Secretary of M Diguesseau, Great Chancellor of France, was asked by his Master one day, what he thought of a production of Voltaire that had just appeared?—"L'Epitre" à L'Uranie"—"Why, Sii," replied he, "the person who wrote it ought to be shut up in a place where he could not get at pen, "ink, and paper. The writer of it is a man "that, by the general turn of his mind, is "capable of ruining a Kingdom and oversetting" any Government whatever"

Madame de Talmond once said to M Voltaire, "I think, Sii, that a Philoso-" pher " phei * should never write but to endeavour to render mankind less wicked and less unhappy

* An ancient Philosopher, fays Ducios, "was one "dry accusing a celebrated Courtezan of seducing the "youth of Athens 'Alas" replied flie, 'Would to "Heaven, that we were the only persons who corrupt "them! D mot you Philotophers come in for your fline of the imputation '-Then,' subjoins Duclos, ' it is " now the fathion to declaim against prejudices, perhaps we have already definojed too many of them prejudice " is the law of the generality of mankind In ineaking on "this subject, I am under the necessity of finding fault "with those writers, who, under the presence of con-66 bring juperitation (which would be a very laudible " motive, if it were ichtained within the bounds of virtue "and of prudence), endeavour to fap the foundmons of "morality, and lookin the bands of fociety, the more " fenieleis, as they themselves would be in the most danger "if they were to fucceed in making profelites The per-"nicious effects which they produce upon thru converts, " is to render them in their youth weless and dangerous "citizens and fiandalous criminals, and in an advanced " age wretched and miferable men, for their can be but ' few of them, who, at that time of life, can possess the " curled advantage over their follows, of becoming fo "completel, abandoned as to be cuelcis pout the future " consequences of then past lives for

- " Nu iquam aliu l Netira, aliud sapientia divit
- ' Nature and Wisdom differ but in name,
- "Their ends and objects ever are the same,
- " In ipite of Sophistiv's ieductive ait,
- " They force their truths eternal on the heart

"the contrary You are always writing agunft that Religion which alone is able to re"firain wickedness, and to afford us confola"tion under misfortunes" Voltarie, according to Brotier, was much struck with what M de Talmond had faid to him, and ex cused himself by saying, "that he wrote only for those who were of the same opinion with himself"

Voltaire's pen was fertile and very clegant, his observations are occasionally acute, yet he often betrays great ignorance when he treats on subjects of ancient learning. Di Johnson told his antigonist Freion, "that Vir e, at "acer, im ingular ac pavearum lite, arum," and Bishop Warburton says of him, with no less

" And, as Juvenal has finely observed,

- " Even plo quod unaue malo com uttitur apf
- " Difficut auctors, Prova est las ultro, quod se
- " Julice nemo nocers abjolutus
- "Whoe'u commits a crime is fure to feel
- " Displeasure at lumfelt, nor can he steel
- " His mind 'granit those compunctions which are sent
- " By guilt itself, as its own punishment
- "Whilft, to increase the anguish of his heart,
- " Accusing Conscience act, the Judge's part "

pleaf inti-

pleafantry than truth, "that he writes indif-"feiently well upon every thing"

According to the Author of the "Galerie" de l'Ancience Com," Tronchin affured his friends, that Voltaire died in great agonics of mind "Fo meris et codo né des Dieux et des "Hommes!" exclaimed he, in those awful moments when truth will force its way "I wished," added Tronchin, "that those who had been "perverted by his writings had been present at "his death, it was a fight too horrid to sup-"port On ne povvoit pas se term contre un "parcil specticle"

"Volture," faid Montesquieu, "can never write a good history He is like the Monks, "who always write for the honour of their "Convent, and never of the subject on which they treat, Voltaire will always write for his "Convent ""

The

*This Convent was a Phory composed of a few pretended Philosophers, and a great Monarch at the head of them, who, however, better acquainted with the nature of men and of human affairs than themselves, did not proceed to the violent extremes into which they give Coltaire's insidel writings possess this permicious quality, that they render insidelity easy to the meanist capacity, and convince those persons by a joke or a sneer, to whom The late Bishop Warburton had intended to have written against Voltaire, and it is a pity that he was distuaded from doing that which he would have done eminently well, as he had wit and talents equal to those of Voltaire, and was considerably his superior in learning. The loss, however, of the antidote of the Bishop to the posson of this lively though dangerous Writer, is in some degree supplied by "Les Lettres de quelques Juess à M de Voltaire"

By the kindness of Mr WYNDHAM, an English Letter of M de Voltaire to Mr Doddington, afterwards Lord Melcombe, is subjoined whom argumentation would be incomprehenfible. They raife a laugh in young minds against certain serious objects, when the impressions are strong and vivid, and scatter those fire-brands in sport, which, under the beauty and playfulness of the stame, cone at their powers of combustion

&quot; A Monson pres de Laufann,
" 4 Fevrier 1756

&quot; Sir,

&quot;I was very fick in the month of January, "at the foot of the Alps, when a handsome youth did appear in my cabin, next to

- " Laufanne, and favoured me with your kind
- " letter, written in September, the date from
- " Eastbury

+ + + +

- "The country about Geneva, which you have feen, is now much improved, noble houses are built, large gardens are planted. Those who say the world impairs every day are quite in the wrong—are quite in the
- " wrong as to the natural world, 'tis not the
- " like in the moral and the political one,
- " Be what it will, I have pitched upon two retreats on the banks of that lake you are pleased to mention in your letter. I pass
- " the winter by Lausanne, and the other fea-
- " fons by Geneva, without care and without
- " Kings ".
- " That country would not perhaps agree " with a Fienchman of twenty-five, but it is
- *Volture was one of the greatest flatterers to Kings and the Great, to their faces and in his letters to them, that ever existed. He had written some veries in favour of M de Choiseul when he was in place, he afterwards wrote complimentary veries on M de Maupeou, who succeeded ham. M de Choiseul, to shew his contempt at this beliaviour, put a representation of the head of Voltane upon a weather-cock on one of the wings of his Chateau, at Chanteloup,

"most convenient to old age, when one is past fixty, the place of reason is a private. Station Yet, though I am nightily pleased with these lands of peace and secolom, I would gladly see another land of liberty again before I die; I would have the honour to see you again, and renew to you my sincere and everlasting gratitude for all the tokens of kindness I received som you when I was in London

- "My good Countrymen have formetimes upbraided me for having too much of the English spirit in my way of thinking, it should be but just I should pay a visit to those who have drawn that reproach upon me, be sure, dear Sir, none was more guilty than you I hope I should find you in good health, for you are born as sound and strong as Nature made me weak and unhealthy. I hope the evening of your day is serene and calm, 'tis the best lot of that hour you have enjoyed all the rest.
  - " I am, with the tenderest respect,

" Sir,

" Your most humble and obedient servant.

" VOLTAIRE "

Sir William Chambers presented his book on Oriental Gardening * to Voltaire The two following Letters passed between them on the occasion:

London, July 3, 1772.

" Sir,

"I TAKE the liberty of fending you a little book lately published by me, it contains, besides a great deal of nonsense, two very pretty prints engraved by the celebrated Bartolozzi, which prints, and the view with which the book was published, are its only recommendations

- "The taste of Gardening, as it seems to me, is very indifferent all over Europe. A wish to see it mended has induced me to throw out a sew hints upon that subject, they may excite others to labour in the same field; so sample, so rich, so well deserving the attention of genius. It is much to be regretted that Monsieur de Voltaire (amussis the
- * That great Architect was much indiculed on the subject of this book. He, however, assumed his friends, that all the ideas of Oriental Gardening mentioned in it were taken from a Treatise of Pather Attrict, an European Misfionary in China, who had written on the Gardens of that Country.

- " great variety of subjects he has so successfully
- "treated) has never employed his thoughts
- " upon this
  - " I have the honour to be, with great respect.
    - "Sir,
    - "Your most obedient humble Servant,
      - " WILLIAM CHAMBERS.
- " To Monsieur de Voltane"

" Ant 7, 1772
" Au Chaican de Firrey

" Monfieur,

"Cr n'est pis assez d'aimei les jardins, ni d'en avoir Il faut des yeux pour les regarder, et des jambes pour s'y promener. Je perds bientôt les uns et les autres, grace à ma vieillesse et à mes maladies. Un des derniers utages de ma vue a été de lire votre tres agréable ouvrige. Je m'aperçois que j'ai suivi vos preceptes autant que mon ignorance et ma fortune l'ont permi. J'ai de tout dans mes jardins, parterres, petite piece d'eau, promemades regulieres, bois tres irreguliers, valons, prés, vignes, potagers, avec des muis de partage couverts d'arbres fruitiers, du pergné et du sauvage, le tout en petit, et fort cloigné de "votre

" votie magnificence Un Prince d'Allemagne

" fe ruineroit en voulant être votre ecolier

" J'aı l'honneur d'etre, avec toute l'estime

" que vous mentez,

" Monsieur.

" Votre tres obeiffant Serviteur,

" VOLTAIRE,

" Gentilhomme de la Chambre du Roi

An impertinent person had teazed Voltaire with continual letters, to which no answer had been given, at last Voltaire wrote to him thus

" My Dear Sir,

" I am dead, and cannot therefore in future have the honour to write to you"

J J ROUSSEAU

This eloquent Writer was very much chargrined, when he was not permitted by Voltaire's friends to add his Louis-d'or to those that had been collected for raising a statue to him, whilst living at the Comedie Francasse at Paris When his friends represented to him as a Philosopher their surprise at this, he replied, "Mais, N'estimates, se means de glone." This passion for glory glory and distinction seems to have been the leading principle of his conduct His liter try career began in paradox, he took the wrong fide of a question long fince fettled, and, firthered by the fuccess of his efforts, he proceeded to his too famous "Contrat Social," the political creed of a neighbouring Nation, who wish, like Mahomet, to propagate it with arms in their hands throughout Europe Yet, as if confcious that what was merely a display of pernicious ingenuity in him, might be taken as a feriors truth by others, he fays, in another place, "In " the milery attendant upon human affairs, " what thing is viluable enough to be pui-" chaled at the expence of the blood of our " brethien? Liberty itself costs too dcar at "that price It is vain," continues he, " to " attempt to confound liberty and indepen-" dence they are things fo different in them-" felves, that it is impossible to unite them "When every one acts as he pleases, he must " often do what is unpleasant to others, and " who can call that fituation a state of free-"dom. Liberry confifts less in having our " own way, than in not being subject to the " will of others. It consiits, likewise, in being " unable to submit the will of another person "to that of one's own Whoever has conti-" nually " nually his own way cannot be free, and, in reality, to command is to obey"

He figs, in his Lettres ecrites de la Montagne, — "After having, during the whole "course of my life, been the panegyrist of a "Republican form of Government, must I, "towards the end of it, be obliged to confess, "that of all the Governments that exist, "Monarchy is that in which there is the "greatest regard paid to the true liberty of "man?"

Had Rouffeau, who was rather capricious than mulignant, rither a man of no fixed principles than of bad principles, lived to have feen the pernicious effects of his paradoxes upon the happiness of mankind in our time, he would have been the first to have execrated his own seductive talents, and to have broken that magical wand, which, though like that of Prospero it could "set the waters in a wild roar," yet did not, like his, possess its more falutary power of allaying them to * The venerable and respectable Bishop of Leon de St Pol, now in London, was once present when Rousseau was accused of being occasionally in his writings contradictory and inconsequent. "I tell mankind," answered he, "what I really think true at the time, and so I perform "my engagement, with them"

CARDINAL DE BRIENNE,

This Prelate was of a Ministerial family, had fome talents, was an elegant writer, and, like Vespasian, would have ever appeared dignus regnands si non regnasset—capable of the office of Pilme Minister of a great kingdom, had he never been placed in that arduous situation

When Archbishop of Thoulouse, he distinguished himself by his polished manners and elegant hospitality. His Pastoial Letter Agrunst Burying in Chuiches is well written, and forcibly exposes that abuse, which, like the toiment of Mezentius, conjoins the living with the dead, and is productive of many mischievous effects on the healths of mankind.

* M de Brienne's great grandfather was Secretary of State to Anne of Austria He published his Memoirs in three volumes 12mo for the use of his son. They are very entertaining. The elder brother of the Cardinal de Brienne, the Marquis, had his arm shot off in the fatal attack of Fort L'Assiette, in Savoy, in 1746. He was requested to retire to his tent "No, no," replied he, "I have another arm left for the service of my King." He persisted, and was soon afterwards killed by a cannon-ball.

"O ye," says he in his Pastoral Letter, " my dear Brethren, who continue to think our « regulations too severe (although we have " been as little rigorous as possible), what com-" plaints can you make, what objections can "you oppose to them? Churches, in the " early times of our holy religion, were never made use of as the sepultures of Christians "They feem to have been so little intended " for that purpose, that in the office for the " confecration of them, according to a learned "Canon Lawyer, there is not a fingle player " that relates to it, though there are some ex-" preisly destined for the consecration of church-" vards, and can you suppose that preten-" fions, against which their abuse will ever " protest, can prevail against the dignity of our " facred fabrics, the holiness of our altars, and " the confervation of the human race?

"Will you then have recourse to your situa"tion, your consequence, the rank which you hold in society?"

"Our grounds of confidence are so great, that we are inclined to think those persons who have the greatest claims to distinction, will be the last to exert the claims Ex ceptions cause always jealously and multiply

HH 2 "pre-

" pretentions Who will dare to complain when the prohibition becomes a general law? and furely in the grave at leaft there ought to be no exception made for any one"

M Hecquet tays, in his "Collection of "Tracts relative to the Exhumation of the great Church of Dunkirk," that the town became more healthy after the bodies of those who had been buried in it had been taken up. The house of the God of Mercy," fays he, "then ceased to be the cavein of Pestilence, and the Sanctuary of Religion was no longer the grive of pollution." Similar effects produce similar causes, and when the exhalations from putrid animal matter are added to the simoke, the filth, and the closeness, of great towns, the philosopher will behold them no less as the destroyers than the corrupters of the human race."

* bee "Preces concernant les Exhumations fartes dans l'Eglife " de St Eloy en D nker que, imprimees et publices par l'Or die du " Gouvernment, Paris, 1785." The ancien regime of France was in general very careful of the lives und healths of its subjects, within the kingdom at least. Were they threatened with any epidemical disease, or did any particular complaint appear, the best Physicians were appointed by the Government to examine into the nature and causes of them, and then reports were printed at the expense of the King. It did not wait for the slow and uncertain exertions of bene-volence.

M. TURGOT.

IT was faid of Turgot, and of his predecessor in the finances, Abbé Terrai, "que le pre"micr fit mal le bien, et que le second fit bien le
"mal" There might be some truth in this, for Turgot, with the best intentions in the volence in the individual, it confidered itfalt as the " nurf-" ing father and the nursing mother of its people" The fame remarks may be extended to any improvement in Agriculture, Manufictures, Navigation, &c The ablest Chemist, the best Mechanics, &c were employed and paid by Government to make experiments, to furnish model, &c a piternal cire well worthy the notice of other Governments, who, though bleffed with more freedom, are but too apt to have less attention and use a less degree of exertion respecting these objects. The ment indeed of a chemical proced to mest the baleful power of contagion, discovered by a learned, polished, and benevolent Physician, has lately attracted the nonce of our Board of Admiralty, and induced it to make use of a method fo fimple and fo cert un to prefave the healths and the lives or those persons committed to their care. No remuneration nor no distinctions have as yet attended the discoverer, who in this, as in some other benevolent exertions, has merely been gratified with the applaufes of his own virtuous mind, those applaufes which the whole course of his liberal and intelligent practice has ever fecured to him -See "A Letter addressed by James " Carmichael Smith, M D F R S to Lord Spencer"

world,

world, was perhaps rather too precipitate in fome of his measures. He supposed the rest of mankind to be as honest, as virtuous, and as intelligent as himself, but was most fatally deceived. Turgot innovated many things in the French Government—the things were very probably in themselves right, but the Nation was not perhaps in a proper state to receive them. The ill success of this upright but imprudent Minister gave rise to the following verses, which were written in 1777, and which were called "La Prophetie Turgotine," a prophecy, alas! too cruelly verified by the rapine, the massacres, the regicides and the sacrilege which have succeeded

PROPHETIE TURGOTINE,

FAITE EN L'ANNEE 1777
SUR L'AIR, "SI LE ROI M'AVOIT DONNE PARIS, &c &c "

VIVENT tous nos beaux cíprits Encyclopediftes!

Du bonheui François épiis,
Grande Economiftes
Par leurs foins au temps d'Adam
Nous reviendrons, c'est leur plan
Momus les affiste,
O gue,
Momus les affiste!

Ce n'est pas de nos bouquins
Que vient leur science,
En eux ces siers Palladins
Ont la sapience
Les Colbert et les Sully
Nous paroissent grands, mais si?
Ce n'est qu'ignorance,
O gué,
Ce n'est qu'ignorance!

On verra tous les états

Entre eux se confondre,

Les pauvies sur leurs grabats

Ne plus se morfor dre,

Des biens on sera des lots,

Qui rendront les gens egaux

Le bel œuf à pondre,

O gué,

Le bel œuf à pondre!

Du même pas marcheront
Noblesse et roture,
Les François retourneront
Au droit de nature
Adicu Parlement et Loix,
Et Ducs et Princes et Rois!
La bonne aventure,
O gué,
La bonne aventure!

Puis devenus vertueux
Par philosophie,
Les François auront des Dieux
A leur fantaisse.

Alors l'amour et sureté
Entre sœurs et freres,
Sucrements et parenté
Seront des chimères,
Chaque pere imitera
Noe qu'ind il s'enivia.
Liberte pleniere,
O gue,
Liberte pleniere!

Plus de Moines langoureux,
De plaintives Nonnes,
Au lieu d'adresser aux Cieux
Matines et Nones,
On verra ces malheureux
Danser, abjurant leur vœux,
Galante chaconne,
O gué,
Galante chaconne!

Partifans des novations,

La fine fequelle

La France des nations

Sera le modele

Et cet honneur nous devrons
Au Turgor et compagnons,
Besogne immortelle,
O gue,
Besogne immortelle!

A qui devrons nous le plus¹
C'est à notie maître,
Qui se croyant un abus,
Ne voudra plus l'être *
Ah¹ qu'il faut aimer le bien
Pour de Roi, n'etre plus rien,
J'enveriois tout paître,
O gué,
J'enverrois tout paitre!

This "Prophetie" was written by M de Lisse, a Captain in the French service at the time in which that virtuous and learned Minister made his reforms in the Government of France, reforms which, however dictated by the greatest purity of intention, and emanating from a mind most highly cultivated and in-

* This relates to what the unfortunate Louis the Sixteenth field to M de Musherbe, when that Minister of State defired his Sovereign to permit him to using "Que rous " tes hemeux, Monsieur! que je puis pas m'en aller aussi —How " happy you are, Sir! Why cannot I resign too" Louis faid one day of M Turgot, "He and I are the only per"fois in the country who have a regard for the people" formed, formed, were but ill calculated for the comfort and happiness of a People who push every thing to extremes, and seem to have been dazzled and to have become wild at the mere dawn of that liberty, to the splendor of which they had been so little accussomed*

M Turgot always gave his testimony in favour of the viitue and good intentions of the late unfortunate Monaich of his country. "Nous " avons un Roi hométe homme," he used always to say—"We have a King who is an honest

* Corruptio optime est jessin a, say the schools,—the abuse of any thing is more dangerous in proportion to its intrinsic excellence A Poet has feigned that Milton became blind, in consequence of the actual appearance of the Goddefs of Liberty to him. The niere shadow of that august and venerable Divinity has offuscated the mental eye of the French nation, and excited it to the indulgence of those rude and turbulent passions by which the most deteilable tyrants themselves have been distinguished, availce, revenge, and cruelty, the violation of every principle of justice, and the profanation of every facred rite. Happy would it have been for themselves and their neighbours, if, like the ancient Cappadocians, they had refused that ficedom which was offered them by the humane and virtuous Turgot, as by their abuse of that mestimable bleshing, the source of every exalted energy of the human mind, they have converted it into a curfe, as well to then iclves as to the other nations of Europe

" man" Poor Turgot should have looked into that oracle of human wisdom, Lord Bacon, who would have told him, " It is not good to try experiments on bodies politic, except the " necessity be urgent, or the utility evident, " and to take good care that it be the define of " reformation that draws on the change, and " not the defire of change that projects on the " reformation Further," adds his Lordship, " all novelty, though perhaps it must not be re-" jected, yet ought ever to be held suspected; and lastly, as the Scripture directs, State " fuper vias antiquas—Let us make a stand upon "the antient ways, and then look about us, " and discover what is the straightest and right " way, and fo walk in it"

M. CHAMFORT

fays in his "Maxims,"

"The laws that respect a secret, and a sum of money entrusted to a man, should stand upon the same foundation.

"One of my friends, a man of very delicate health, but of great strength of character,

- " ter, used to say of himself, " I am as well
- " the reed that bends and never breaks, as the
- " oak that breaks and never bends, homo inte-
- se 1101 totas not vis
- " A man without character is a thing, not
- " A min without principles is commonly a
- " man without character Had he been born
- " with a character, he must have seen the ne-
- " ceffity of forming to himfelf principles con-
- " fiftent with it
- " Philosophy, like the art of Medicine, con-
- tuns a great deal of trash, very few reme-
- " dies, and haidly any specifics
- " Vanity causes a man to exert his talents
- •• more forcibly than he otherwise would have
- "done Put a flick to a piece of pointed iron
- " it becomes a dart, add a few feathers to it
- " and it becomes an arrow.
- "Weak men are to rogues and defigning
- " persons what light troops are to an army,
- " who do more mischies than the army itself
- " by icouring and ravaging the country

- "If a man really wishes to avoid being a "quack, he should never get upon a stage,
- " but if once he has played his tricks upon it,
- " he must continue them, or submit to have
- " flones thrown at him by the populace
- " Most men are slaves, because they cannot bronounce the monosyllable "No," and are
- " unable to live alone
- "General mixims are, in the conduct of
- " life, what routine is in certain arts Situa-
- " tions in each occasionally arise, which require
- " fomething beyond them."

ABBÉ BROTIER,

the Editor and Translator of Tacitus, was a Jesu "No one," says his Biographei, "evei

- " more ugidly practifed the maxim of the an-
- " cient Philosophei, "live concealed" Many
- " of his own excellent maxims still remain in
- " the memory of his friends"

He used to say, "That as a man could not always do what he wished to do, to ensure "the

the peace and the tranquillity of his life, he ought to be contented with doing that which he ought to do

"The great sources of happiness are underflanding and cheerfulness. Nothing in the world can be set against them, and they can fland in the stead of every thing."

He used to say, "That in proportion as the Government was in the hands of more persons, it was always more unjust. Observe," said he, "in the Roman Provinces governed by the Senate, to what an excess tyranny and rapine were carried by the avarice of the Pro-Consuls, and by the power of impunity which they possessed, being masters themselves of the Senate, and friends and relations of the Senators, the only Judges of their illbehaviour"

"There are three things in the world," faid he, "that know no kind of reftraint, and are "governed by no laws, but merely by passion "and brutality —civil wars, family quariels, "and religious disputes"

He agreed with Tacitus, that hereditary power depended entirely upon chance and upon birth, birth, and that elective power was supposed to depend upon an enlightened and well-considered choice "But," added he, "the opinions of "mankind are so little founded in tiuth, that "the long experience of past ages has taught us, that we owe more of our greatest and "most excellent Princes to birth than to "choice"

Alittle elegant and entertaining work of Abbé Brotier was published after his death, intitled, "Paroles Memorabies," 12100 of which much tie has been made in This Collection

GENERAL INDEX

OF

NAMES

A BBOT, 1 280 Abelaid, m 313 Acquin, iv 444 Addison, 11 273 281 111 294 Adretz, 1v 28 Adman VI in 103 Alais, 1v 295 Aland, 1 262 n Alba, iv 350 Alberoni, ili 263 Albert, 111 5 70 Alberti, iii 27 Albret, 1 111, 112 Alencon, IV 14 73 Alexander VI in 28 Alı Bev, 11 450 Alphonfo V iii 240 Ames, 11 316 Amyot, 111 429 Ancre, w 168 Andilly, 1v 335 Andrews, 1 205 274 408 Angelo, 111 32 37, &c. 59 VOL IV

Anne, Q 11 238 Anson, 11 348. Aquinas, 111 5 Arc, 111 356 Aietin, iii 10 Argonne, 11 346 111 123 17 345 439 Arnauld, m 123. 1 20 335 339, 340, 341 Ainaux, iv 184 Atundel, 1 193 426 Afcham, 1 195 11 332 111 166 Atterbuiy, 1, 165 Aubigné, iv 136 Austria, iv 166

B
Bacon, Anthony, 1v 104
Bacon, Loid, 1 184 233
439 11 221 236 n 297
Bacon, Nicolus, 1. 181.
Bacon, Roger, 1. 1
Baillie, 1 337
Bainton, 1 101
1 1 Ealgry,

Ralgux, 1 377 Balmont, iv 217. Balti role ii 280 Bilzar, 1 241 111 217 Pane a ll. in 40 Babero maro Birber, 11 3,8 Buillon ii 118 Bunad, n 486 Birrow, ii 134 318 Dith, 11 257 Fivere, 1 323 W $14 Bivaid, in 413 Bivle, 1v 348 Birlie, 1 421 Beauchamp, 1 213 Beaufort, 11 256 Beaup in, in 385 Perumanoir, iv 149 Redell, 1 347 Bedford, 11 350 " 14 347 Bei'bi, 11 123 B. H. 104 Believie, 11 113 Bellow, 1 192 Beltance, 1 109 1 421 Bembo 11 57 Benearch VI 11 8 Bentley n 16; 320 345 Berkelev 1 347 Reinter iv 292, Bein mi, n 311. Berulle 1. 213 Berviel, 111 333 11 400 B.z., 111 20 Riton, 1' 127, 130 Blickmore, it 161 Blanchet, 111 293 Boerhave, 11 Roileau, 1v 219 304 328. 432 Bolevn 1 66 83, &c 101 Bolingbroke, ii 260 38. 345, 346 482 n. 17 440

Boie in 79 Roigii, in 28, 29 Poscaren, 11 343 347. Boffuet, 1v 256 206 Butictorit, 11 269 ". Bouchardon, iv 398 Bouden, 1v 421 Bourton, 11 454 415. Bouffieres, IV 330 Bouteville, iv 160 Boyle, 1 344 Bradshan 1 454 Bieligne, ili 302 Buenne, w 160 Brooke, 1 251 Biotiei, iii 235 1v 477 Brunfwick, in 233 Binfquet, m 150 Brussel-, 1 200 lubb, n 262 284 Bucer, in 5 Buchanan, 1 157 170 Buckingham, 1 230 318 328 535 388 11 104 156 216 396 Buston, 11 323 n Bugindini in 53 Bulttrode, 11 103 Buonalotti, m 56 Burke, 11 173 Buckhirdt, in Sr So Burkigh, 1 171 218 Burlip, ton, 12)1 buinet, 11 100 170 174 182 136 Burney, 11 375 463 SI H Busby, u 166 Bute, u 403 Butler, 11 141 336 Buss, 18 379

Calamy,

Calamy, 1 355 Callot, iv 214. Calvin, iii 97 Cameruius, iii 182 Camerinus, in 93 Cameron, 11. 333 Campanella, 1v 215 Campeus, 1 91 Campiftron, in 264 Capet, in 310 Calacci, iii 178, 179 Cardan, 1v 70 Cardiere, iii 55 Carlifle, it to 2 Carlos, 111 248 Carnarvon 1 329 11 513 Caroline, Q 11 334 415 Carpi, in 69 Carr, 11 110 Carteret, 11 309 Castwright, 1, 191 11 512 Cafas, 111 184 Cafauthon, 1 280 Cassindie, iv 356 Caffini, 11 199 Castellan, 111 402 Caftile, 1 34 Catherine, 1 56 60 Catherine II in 198, 199 Cayet, 1V I 51 Cecil, 1 204 Celuri, m 180 401 410 Cerçeau, iv 445 Cham Chi, m 132 Chambers, in 2 iv 461 Chambiai, iv 389 Chamfort, 1v 475 Chamloe, 1 194 Chapeau, 11 190 Chapelain, iv 276 Charles I 1 202 417 424 Charles II 11. 1. 135, 136 187 319.

Charles V ni 66 83 08. 103 116 137 148 386 398 420 1v 93 n of France, in 337 Charles VI in 312 Charles VII m 346 Charles VIII 111 380 Charles IX in 328 iv 115 Charles XII in 220 Charles the Bold, 111 358 Charlett, 11 247 Charlus, iv 17d Charpentier, ii IOO 14. 330 Charron, 1v 69 Chatham See Pitt Chaulnes 11 162 Cheiteifield, 11 389 Cheyne, 11 341 378 Child, 11 234 Chillingworth, 1 432 # Christian, 11 301 Chustina, 1 288. 111 211. Chivioloras, 111. 10. Ciccio, 1 248 Ciniabue, iii 6 8 Cluendon, 1 325 329 371. 387 11 13 17 32 1 Clarke, 11 320 Clayton, 11 157 Clement VII in 117 400. Clement XI iv 297 lifton, n 146 Coke, 1 252 111 54 Colbert, 1v 275 Coligny, in 155 1V 294 Collins, 11 383 Colomies, in 73 Columbus, na 247 Combald, m 410 Commes, 11 185 n. 111. 383. Compton, 11. 315 Conde. 112

Conde, 1v. 13 164 247
334 343 369
Congieve, 11 308
Conti, 1v. 403
Corelli, 1v. 335
Cornili, 11 157
Connuel, 1v. 370
Contegno, 11 105
Coutenay, 1 11
Cow per, 1 370
Coxe, 11 161
Crebillon, 11 112 1v. 349

Cicqui, 1v 251
Cirllon, 1v 146.
Cioke, 1 380
Cromwell, Lord, 1 92
Cromwell, Oliver, 1 300
311, 312 352 386 440
11 /1
Cromwell, Richard, 1 368
croy, 1n 170
Cult oper, 11 13 10
Cumbuland, 1 218
Cummans, 11 395

Dacier, iv 377 Dalrymple, 11 265 Dante, 14 49 310 Dainier, 1 169 Darwin, 1' 227 437 n Demosthenes, 1 249 Dennis, ii 309 Derbs, 1 359 Deleutes, m 216 Devonibire, ii 154 Doddington See Melcombe Donatcho, nr. 13 Doni, 111 45 Donne, 1 279 Dorii, iii 154 416 Doriflaus, 11 151 Dormer, 11 285 Dorfet, 1 274.

Downing, ii 5
Dryden, ii 141
Dubois, iv 162 416 421.
Ducinge, iv 296
Duclos iv 246 428 455.
Dugueichin, iii 339
Duke, i 268
Dumoulin, iv 314
Duncin, ii 310
Dunning, iii 215.
Duicr, iii 142

E Edward the Black Prince, 1 7 300 Edward III 1 4 390 Fdw aid IV 1 25 111. 372 Fdward VI 1115 Edward, 111 186 Effiat, 1 240 Egmont, m 256 Elizabeth, Q 1 140 297 390 Elizabeth, Princess, 1 212. 111 224, 225 Fllesmere, 1. 254 Elouft, 111 314 Elv, 1 281 Emanuel, 1v 79 Eon, 1v 426 Erafmus, 1 105 111 67 77 Eiskine, 11 414 Effex, 1 151 182 402 Este, 1v 344 Litrees, 1 241 Evelon, 11 217 111 193 1V 23F. Evremond, iv 200 343 Eugene, 11 186 259 1v. 359

F 1010, 11 190 Pairtan, 1 313 375 Fall land, 1 378.

Fal. 1" 16 ł illopius, iii 121 Fanthawe, 1 306 11 22 43 63 Farneze, m 177 Felibien, iv 388 Function, 11 271 Femil, ii 191 Tenton, 1 346 Ferdinand V iii 242 kerriai, iv 315 n Finch, 1 377 Fisher, 1 69 102 Fitzgeiald, i 300 Flamack, 1 54 Flechier, iii 177 Fletcher, n 250 Fleuranges, 111, 69., Fleury, 1V 423 Fontaine, ii 104 Fontenelle, m 112 1V 416 43 I Fortescue, 1 20 Foucquet, 1v 312 Francis I iii 54 60 91 355 394 413 416 422, 423 Franklin, iv 223 n Fièderic, 11 359 401 III 83 " 231 11 447 Free, 1, 348 n Freind, 11 271 Freinoy, iv 440 Frith, 1 101 Fronsberg, in S3 2 Fusel, 1 460 m 51 143 425

Galcazzo, in 405 Gallo, in 44 Gallo, in 460 in 465 Galcoigne, 1 15 Gallendi, iv 54 231 289 George I in 252 277 290

George II 11 333. Ghiberti, iii 38 G1b. 1 207 Gibbon, 111 329 14 Gibson, 1 201 Giles, 1 357 397 Giotto, ii 8 Glamorgan, 1 305 Godeui, iv 230 Godolphin, ii 186 Godwin, 11 149 Goldimita 11 460 Gomberville, 1v. 279. Gondemar, 1 263 Gonialvo, m 245 Gourville, 11 108 Grange, IV 413 Granville, n 294 309 Green, 1 361 Gregory, w 56 Greville, 1 251 11 309 Giev, 1 129 Gullandai, in 37 Gumstone, 1 381 Grotius, 1 279 Guanni, iii 10 Guercheville, iv 90 Guevara, m 182 Guido, iv 395 Guicciardini, in 112, Guillemot, iv 179 Guife, iv 10 11 101 171. 261 427 n Gustavus, m 205 Guvnne, 11 316

113

Hanmer,

YNDEX.

Hantrer, 11 224 Hanway, 1v 88 Hardwicke, 11 301 434 Humgton, w 316. Harliv, jv 76 Harley, 11 108 Harmer, 11 456 Haro, 1 273 386 Hairington, 1 164 111 260 Hirry, 1 30 11 102 Hulling 11 35 Hastings iv 320 H,vdock, 1 277 Havee 11 364 383 Heatl cote, 11 280 Heat'meld, 1v 148 Her quet, 18 468 Helver n 177 Hennusei, 1 48 Hentietta Maria, 1 316 Herry II in 428, 429 52 Henry III IV 71 Henry IV of England, 1 Henry IV of France, 1v 81 156 Henry V 1 14 17 111 344 347 Henry VI 1 10 Henry VII 1 33 Henry VIII 1. 30 18, &c 104 111 79 91 148 163 401. Herbert, i 307 111 180, Heieford, 11 207 Heywood, 1 113 Hickes, 11 247 Hılaire, ıv 362 Hill, 11 143 346 Hue, m 353 Hoadley, 11 335 Hoare, 111. 60.

Hobbes, 1 241 15 151 1V. 347 Hoffman w 315. Hopital, 1, 2 55 Hopton, 1 300 Horne, 11 343 n Hough, 11 3,3. Houssaic, in 125 410 Houard, 1 369, 11 315 Honell, 1 201, &c 316. 326 451, &c. Frudson, 11 469 Hume, 1 161 it 336 484 1 1V 31I Hungerford, 1 427 Hunter, 11 467 Huss, in 135

Tackfon, 11 36, 111 81 2. Tacob, 1, 264 Tames I 1 202 James II 11 143 238 353. 1V 54 James IV 1 51 m Jernnin, iv 69, 82 132 Tefferies, 11 156 Innocent IV. 111 5. Innocent X in 125. Innocent XI m 127 John II 111 234 334 336. John III m 235 John IV 111 236 [chnfon, n 165 183 # 223 232 308 315 320, 324 340 387 394 461 111 229 IV 81 183 n 324 2 443 2 456 Joli, 1v 267 Jon 15, 111. 76 86 Tones, 1 291 11 459 476. Jonion, 1 267 Jortin, 111 66 83 n. Tovius. jovius, ili 10 Tox ce, 1 406 Ircne, m 129 Ifibella, Q in 244 Julius II in 31 45

Kang Hi, in 131 Keene, 11 329 11. 263 Keith, 1 165 111 233 King, 11 289 293 Knight, 1 391 Anox, 1 167

Ι.

Lamez, m 117 iv 326. Landidowne, 11 294 Lane, ii 11. Langton, 11 83 Lannoi, 111 396 Lascaris, iii 26 Laud, 1, 315 337 378. Lauderdale, 11 167. Laura, 111 403 Lavater, 1v 436 n. Law, 1v 419 Le Clerc, m. 60 Lemerius, iv 223 Lentale, 1. 359 I eo X 111 15 61, &c 117 Leyden, 111 189. Lille, 11 473 Lloyd, 11 239 Lobb, 11 233 Lockhart, 1 356 11 108 Lock, 1v 390 n Locke, 11 90. 219. 1v. 252 Lánguerue, 11 309 Longueville, 1v 383 Lorraine, iii 345 1V 75 399 Louis I 111 309 Lows VI na 312 Louis VIII ill 327

Louis IX iii 329. Louis XI 111. 365 Louis XII m 386 iv 161. Louis XIII 1 288 1v 51. 125 158 187 Louis XIV 111 126 313. 1v 233, Louis XV. 1v 402 Louis XVI iv 447 Louis, Dauphin, iv 403 Loavois, ii 198 iv 360 Lavola, m 109 Lucinte, iv. 180 Lucy, 11 153 Lum, 1v 334. Lunebourg, 1v. II Lup1, 111 7 Luther, m 36. 61 67 74 120 155 Luxembourg, 11 176 Luz. 1 171 Licurgus, m 118

Mabillon, iv 296 Macclesfield, 11, 284 Machiavel, iii 22. it 347. Mihomet II in 129, 130; 131 Maillehois, 111, 270, Mintenon, 11 257. Malelacibes, 1 449 M lheibe iv 229. Mallet, 1 237. Mansfield, 11 425 Manzeli, in 94. Mapletoit, 11 139 161 223 Marcello, m 47 Marchials, iv 261 Margaret, Princels, in 379 Margaret, Queen, 111 406. Marillac, iv 159 n 204 206. Mar vaux, 1v 446 Mail-

Montmorence, i 300 av. 23 174 Montsensier, w 49 Montpezat, iv 11 More, 1 92 91 11 219 Moigan, 11 463 n Moiton, 1 167 Morvilliers, v 47 Moiston, ni 150 Mott., 11 176. Mouhn, 1 448 Mountfort, 11 139 Mudge, 11 393 Munce, m 106 Munetus, iv 77

N

Navailles, 18 342 Nectaire, iv 76 Nelfon, 11 222 Newcastle, 1 304 Neuton, 11 233 322, 323 1V 282 " Nicaile, iv 394 Nichols, 11 303 Nocl, 1v 345 Nortolk, 1 100 112 168 Normandy, m 333. Norris, 11 243 North, 11 339 Northumberland, 1 74 113 Nostradamus, iv 51 Noy, 1 326

Geolampadius, iii 145 Oldham, 11 167 Olivirez, 1 296 111 259. 1V 185 Onflow, 11 96 Ortord, 11 272 111 200 # Oricans, 1v 252 254 40% Ormond, 1 436 11.10 32. Orte, Orte iv 48
Omorne, 1 398
Ofma, in 1594
Offit, iv 135
Otho Vanius, iv 361
Overbriv, 1 267
Oxenfliein, in 208 2.0
215
Oxford, ii 144 238, 239
268

P

Page, 1 200 Palingenius, 11 94 Pallavichini, n 299 n Panton, 1 441 Panvinius, ili di Paker, 1 153 186 Pifeil, 1 323 11 251 n 462 IV 300 350 2 Patterit, iv 79. Pissiones, 1v 361 Patin, 1 373 iv 296 357 Pavillon, 1v 358 Pawlet, 1 73 l'ence, n 284 445 Pelisson, iv 313 Pumbioke, 1 327 Penn, u 144 Peicari, m 38 Peter the Great, 1 324 " 11 128 n 254 111 191 iv 259 Peterborough, 11 269 Peters, 1, 310. Petrarch, 111 9 Peyresc, 111 73 1v 230. Plulip II in 2,6 Philip IV in 259 Philip V ni 262 Pibrac, 1 305 P Pieicy, 1 358 Pitt, 11 350 389 392, 393 Planta, 11 179 18 102 Pleffis, iv 102

Poggi, 111 10, 11 Pole, 1 22. Polionac, 111 273 1v. 378 Politian, iii 9 Polton, 1 18 Pomeranus, iii 76. Pong, 111 167 Pope, 11 260 298 Porter, 1 208 1v 136 Poulland, 11 302 Poit Royal, 11 342 l'ouinn, iv 387 Pretender, 11 268 Priolo, iv 382 Prior, 11 300 Propertia S e Rossi. Piynne, 11 37 Pudiev, 11 145. Pulteney, n 257 Pre, 1 390 Pvm, 1 336 11 508

Querno, 111 62 Quin, 1 367 11 375

Ð

Racine, iv 240 327 Rileigh, 1 185 266 Rameau, 1v 442. Rance, 1v. 352 Rantzau IV. 224 Raphael, in 44 58 iv 394. Raulinion, 1262 n Regnard, w 316 Reinserie, iv 260 Reielby, 11 158 Retz, 1 265 332. Renchlin, in 66 Reynolds, 1 404, 11 304 465 469 111 51-14 390 Ribaumont 1 5 Richardion, i 281 ii 223. 333 Richelieus

Richelieu 1 241. 288 m 100 IV 166 177 184 203 214-Robertson, in 297. Roche i 8 Roche'oucault, iv 280 307. Rochester, 11 12 482 2 Rolan iv 207 Rother 11 446 Rofne, 111 14 57. Roffi, 111 104. Rouse, 1 59 Routicau, w 453. Rouikl, iv 297 Routh, 11 353 n Rubens, 1 313 1V 395-Ruçellat, 1v 152 Rust, 11 132

Ç

Sadolet, 111 72 Saib, 11 450. 5 de, 11 460 Sales, IV 154 Salifbury, 1 302 Salmalius, iv 284. Salmoneto, 1 303 Sandby, 11 256 Sun Marino, iii 274. Santeuil, 11 298 Saville, 11 120 216. Sixe, 1 425 Scali, iii 27 Scaliger, 11 321 111 97. 1v. 78 I56 Scanderbeg, m 130 Scarron, iv 333 Schomberg, 1v 143 Scott, iv 107. Seckendoni, m 83 # 89. Seg1 410, 1V 331 Seguier, iv 1,8 Schen, 1 324 387 n 11 494 Senega, 1v. 324.

Sepier, iv 27, Servetus, 111 toe. Sevigne, iv 222 Senard, 11 113 Shaftelbury, 11 94. Sharpe, 11 359 Sheffield, 11 216 Sherlock, 11 166 Shippen, 11 339 Sigilmund, ni 134 Sillery, iv 145 SlingBy, 1 376 408 Smith, 11 464 111 59 14 61 7 Smyth, iv 469 ". Somers, 11 272 Semerict, 1 424 Soplar, 11 240 Solbicit, 1v 287 347. Solel, 111 354 Soufflot, m 4 South, 11 155, 166. douthcote, 11 299 Spalat nus, n. 83 🛩 Sprvin י 407 Spence, to pre Somola, iv 155 St Pol, 1v 465 m. St nhope, 11 278 326 Stan-flaus, 11 408 Steward, 1 181 Strafford, 1 245 315 333. Stinde 1 427 Strozzi, ili 183. 400 Siuart, 1 213 Suem. 11 397 Sully, iv 85 150 Suia, 111 234 Sutclifte, 1 210 n ኃሜ itt, በ 164 200 S,denham, 11 160 233. Sudney, 1 349 111 238. Symmachus, ul 2

Τ. Tabor, 11 164 Tulmond, 1v 454. Talon, 1 323 1v. 309 Taylor, 11 127 Teligny, iv 44 Tellier, IV 297 Temple, 11 43 Teniers, 11 126 Tete-noire, in 356 Tetzel, 111 74 Theodoric, in I Thomas, 11 301 Thomion, 11 375 Thornball, 11 300 Thou, 1v 57 216 Throckmorton, 1 139 Tunoleon, 1 168 Titian, iii $9 166 Toland, 11 240 252. Tompion, 11 300 Tompson, 11 145 Tooke, 1 257 Torie, 1v 230 Townshend, 11 277 288

354 410 Tremouille, 1v 97 Tronchin, 1v 457 Tucker, 11 479 Turenne, 11 271 1v 361 Turgot, 1v 469 Tyrrell, 11 510.

U V
Valiere, 1v 255
Valois, 1v 93 115
Vanbrugh, 11 304
Vane, 1 370 464 111 207
Varillas, 111 63 1v 418 n
Vafur, 111 39 47
Veg 1, 111 260
Vendome, 111 263
Vere, 1 300 1v 155
Vergennes, 1v. 449 n.
Vefalius, 111 102.

Vielleville, in 422
Vigneres, in 41
Villemur, 48
Villers, in 182
Villers, in 182
Villers, in 230
Vinci, 12 401 423.
Voifin, iv 244.
Voiture, iv 167
Voltaire, ii 376 in 63 231
274 iv 327-452.
Voffius, in 73 iv 282.
Uibino See Raphael.
Uiher, i 463

W Wales. Princess Dowager. 11 392 Waller, Fdm 11 148 Waller, Wm 1 321 357 308 Wallis, 11 133 153 161 Walpole, n 287 298 328. 335 337 3<sup>8</sup>7 Walsh, n 308 -Walton, 1 364 Warburton, 1 237 314 377 17 456 458 Ward, 11 162 Nardoui, 1 426 Watham, 1 110. Warner, 1 158 Warington, n 184 Warton, iii 81 n i Wat vick, 1 302. 333 352 385 H 42 Weld, IV 355 Whatten, 11 326 Whifton, 11 278 Whitgift, 1. 190. Wickliffe, 1 9 Will im III ii 169 190 &C 111 193 Villiams.

Williams, 1 438 457 II

135
Winnington, 11 354
Wolfey, 1 68 73 III 103
Wood, 11 310
Worcefler, 1 413
Wotton, 1 349 III 80.
Wren, 11 310
Wyndham, 11 262 281.
359 376 III 270 IV 458
Wynne, 1 441.

X Ximenes, iii 172.

Y
Yarmouth, 11 266
Yorke, 11 275.
Young, 11, 342.

Z. Zouvelben, 111. 70.

DIRECTIONS to the BINDER for placing the Engravings

Vol Page
I — Frontispiece 164 388 438	Unie Unde Extracat Music — Queen Mary's Praver. Hampden's Fac Similes. 2 Plates. Lady Anundell
II — Frontispiece 83 397 446	Stratford House Ludy Fanshawe Lord Chatham's Fac Simile. Wortley Montague, Esq
III — Fronuspiece 81 150 269 408	Di s Prater ios  Music — Queen of every moving  Measure  Chiteau de la Rochesoucault.  Caidinal Alberoni San Marino
319 405	The Paraclete Certofa of Pavia
IV — Frontispiece 362	Decoro inter Verba Silentio Marshal Turenne

ERRATA

V ol	P ge	Line
Ţ	119	2 for one of his mothers-in-law, read his
	204	16 for Treasury, read Treasurer
	263	9 from bottom, for himself, read him
11	236	4 of the note for it, scholu, real ill scholus 5 of the note, for Fulvia, read Semptonia penult for necessi, read necessi
	353	6 and throughout that article, for Joseph Hough, read John Hough
	397	20 for towering, read lowering
	463	14 for tracts, read travels
Ш	58	5 for Robert, real Cardinal
γı	61	12 fn Montagur, . ea. Montagne.